Two shocking cases of wife killing lately came before the courts, in both cases the result of child marriage. In one a child aged ten was strangled by her husband. In the second case a child of tender years was ripped open with a wooden peg. Brutal sexual exasperation was the sole apparent reason in both instances. Compared with the terrible evils of child marriage, widow cremation is of infinitely inferior magnitude. The public conscience is constantly being affronted with these horrible atrocities, but unfortunately Native public opinion generally seems to accept these revelations with complete apathy, hence the difficulty of adopting any quickening measures of reform. However, there are signs in one or two directions that the example recently set by the Rajpoot States is beginning to bring forth some fruit. A largely attended conference of thayasths, comprising 2,000 delegates, is assembled at Bankipore. Various resolutions have been passed condemning infant marriage, excessive marriage, and funeral expenditure, and encouraging female education and moral, physical, and technical education for boys. Subscriptions amounting to Rs. 10,000 were collected. Unfortunately, so long as the Brahmins stand aloof from social reforms, specialised and local agitation leads to little or no practical results. However, every meeting of this description contributes something to awakening Native public opinion to the cruel and repulsive character of this uncivilised social custom and in this way may help to induce its gradual removal.

The Siam Commission has started for Burma.

The scheme for utilising the feudatory armies is making fair progress. About 13,000 troops are already in training—5,000 in the Punjab, 3,000 in Cashmere, and the rest in Rajpootana. Bikanir supplies a camel corps of 500 camels. The Maharajahs of Ulwar, Bhurtpore, and Jodhpore command in person. If the present tentative system proves successful it will be applied universally throughout India.

BURMA.

Rangoon, Nov. 10.

The arrangements for Prince Albert Victor's visit include a stay of three days in Rangoon and two in Mandalay. He will return from Mandalay by river on one of the Irrawaddy flotilla steamers.

Mr. Buchanan and Lieutenant Thatcher, who were tried for having villagers beaten, have been fined Rs. 300 each, the fine being distributed among the villagers.

Large numbers of Burmans implicated in dacoities have, without receiving formal pardon, settled down to quiet life. The local Government, while not able to declare a general amnesty, have determined in such cases to limit the prosecutions for past offences, and an order has been passed accordingly that no person shall be tried for dacoity or rebellion committed before August 1, 1889, who since that date has lived in his village with the consent of the headman and led an honest life. This order does not include proclaimed offenders, murderers, and others, whom for special reasons the district officers consider it advisable to bring to justice. Considering the large proportion of the population who have been more or less engaged in dacoity, this measure, while leaving the Government free to deal with bad cases, will relieve many persons now leading respectable lives from the fear of prosecution for old offences and from possible extortion by the police, who may hold such offences over their heads in terrorem for the purpose of levying blackmail.

With regard to convicted offenders, the gaol lists have been ordered to be revised with a view to putting in force a tentative and progressive remission of sentences. It is hoped that large numbers will be released within a year, and judging from the past this policy seems likely to have an excellent effect.

The Siamese Boundary Commission will consist of Mr. Ney Elias, C.I.E, Mr. Scott, superintendent of the Southern Shan States, Mr. Archer, Consul at Zamme, Major Barrow, and Major Bingham.

A small expedition will soon start to punish the tribes to the north-east of Bhamo, who gave some trouble last year.

The local Government is believed to have under consideration proposals for granting immediately more liberal terms to persons prospecting in Upper Burma.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

WESTERN INFLUENCE IN INDIA.

(Madras Times.)

In the history of most nations is recorded a time when literary knowledge, or what may more conveniently be referred to as "learning," was confined to the priestcraft, or to some special class among the people, corresponding to the priestcraft. Centuries ago this was the position in England. The language of learning was not the language of the country; the language even of religious ceremonies was a foreign tongue, and there was thus practically no general education worthy of the name. In course of time this changed, and with the germination in the minds of the people of a desire for knowledge came also a stormy aspect of social and political affairs, which lasted for generations, and finished only when the whole condition of these affairs had been revolutionised. It will probably be admitted without argument that the departure from the old order of priest-ridden people, shut out from literary studies and deliberately kept in a state of ignorant blindness, had no small effect in bringing about the turbulent scenes which followed when the process of reform had fairly commenced. The relations of different classes of society were changed, the whole structure of society as it previously existed was disorganised, and an entirely new edifice had to be constructed. The process was naturally one full of difficulties and risks, and it was not safely completed without some severe shocks being administered to the foundations, which, however, we may hope were stronger after the termination of the convulsions than had ever been the case before.

India also has witnessed the time when her Brahmans confined all knowledge to themselves and threatened pains and penalties on the lower castes, should they venture to appropriate unto themselves any part of the knowledge which was claimed to be the peculiar inheritance of the "twice-born." The Brahman priest took upon himself to officiate at feast and festival and at all religious ceremonies of the "once-born." He helped to hasten the advent of that intellectual darkness into which the generality of the nation was plunged, and to prevent the people from emerging thence. Knowledge and learning were the monopoly of the higher caste, and the Sudras and others were debarred from sharing it, until at length the time arrived which may be looked back to now as the beginning of the end. Education among the higher classes stopped at a point fixed for them by tradition. There was no inducement to make further progress. They knew enough to enable them to mumble the prescribed formulas and to keep the uneducated in submission and awe by a show of superior knowledge, superior only because it was not understood by their hearers, and perhaps in some instances but of that dog-Latin type of which so much fun has been made in the writings of Sir Walter Scott. Not understood by the hearer, perchance not even by the possessor, this knowledge was nevertheless power, and power which was most assiduously exercised. Having reached its maximum, the study of the Vedas among the higher castes gradually fell into decay, and with it the meaning of the customs and ceremonies adopted on religious and other occasions was lost or became obscure. Then, later, Western education appeared on the field, to point the way to a more profitable life, and the study of the Vedic religion was for a time driven into a corner, while the higher castes, as well as others, were fitted to engage in the uncanonical professions which we still see them following. Increased occupation among all classes reduced the leisure previously available for the study and performance of the poojahs and ceremonies enjoined by the Vedas; and Brahman priests as well as laymen were not slow in adapting themselves to their new environments and the changed order of things in their country.

We cannot yet speak of India as having passed through the trials to which this change of the situation has already begun to subject her. She must rather be regarded as in the midst of a sea of troubles, and there are already signs that it will need steady and careful management to bring her safely and quietly through. The cry among the people now is not only for education and learning, but for religious teaching, for reform, for the restoration of the Hindu faith freed from the numerous excrescences accumulated during the course of centuries. We might well say of the Hindus of to-day they know not what they ask. Some, at least, of the excrescences alluded to are due to the influence of Western teachings, and these teachings are in their efforts adverse to the restoration of ancient Hinduism. Already we see the barriers of caste less strongly defined; even now we see men desirous of learning things that were not even dreamed of by their forefathers. And yet these same people wish to try to reinstate the ancient faith. It would appear as if they overlooked or else underestimated the probable results which will follow any such attempt. They do not ask to go back to Hinduism in the hands of the Brahmans alone; they do not ask to return to a powerful priesthood as compared with an ignorant populace, and it is questionable whether many have stopped to consider how far the old religion is compatible with the new order of social life, how far a return to it would check educational ambition, and how greatly social order would be disturbed during the course of retrogression. Logic would tell them that the first blow in favour of religious reform such as they speak of should be struck at the root of that Western education which has been one of the main factors in bringing India to what it is now. Yet these reformers do not appear to suggest any such blow. They desire rather to adapt Western education to Oriental religion or Oriental religion to Western education. They may well pause to reflect upon the difficulties in their way, the manifold objections that offer themselves. Feeling the pulse of classes already disturbed and excited, the reformer may think fit to move cautiously. By slow and cautious steps it may be possible to carry out the idea of cultivating education and yet restoring ancient Hinduism; but there are signs enough that hasty movements would be fraught with danger, and that there are already at work sufficient elements of turbulence to require all the skill of the statesman, the philosopher, and the religious zealot to prevent the desires of the people from becoming unmanageable.

THE SURVEY OF UPPER BURMA.

(Mandalay Herald.)

Now that the great traverse of the Central Provinces in India, which cover an area of some 40,000 square miles, is being completed, the survey parties engaged there will, as their respective allotted work is finished, be sent on to Burma to complete the survey of this country, which for want of being surveyed does not yield anything like the revenue it is on all hands admitted to be capable of yielding. But it must not be supposed that because we are in want of survey parties we are surveyless. We have a cadastral, topographical, trignometrical and forest survey parties. Most of these parties are principally working in Lower Burma, but the topographical and trigonometrical surveys of Upper Burma have already begun, and under present arrangements a fresh batch of surveyors from the Central Provinces will be soon added to the topographical party already in our province, and one party of the cadastral survey will be sent to Upper Burma. The policy which has been found so useful in the Central Provinces will be followed in this country. The several survey parties will prepare traverse or skeleton maps, the details of which will be filled in by local agency and officials. The urgency of having this country surveyed is great, for as a fact very considerable areas even in our oldest province, Tenasserim, are not yielding revenue from the want of being properly surveyed. There is, perhaps, more need of an immediate cadastral survey of Upper Burma than any of the others. Upper Burma is capable of yielding far more revenue than it does at present, and that almost immediately. The cadastral work is made very much easier by the fact that it is in many parts in a very advanced state of irrigation. In this respect the plains of Kyouksay stand pre-eminently first; they are the most fertile tract in Upper Burma, with a system of irrigation that is complete in spite of its inhabitants never having had any engineering appliances to complete them. But the fact bears abundant testimony to the advancement of the ryots of this district in agrarian matters. In order to push on the work of the cadastral survey, the cadastral surveyors whose advent in Upper Burma may be said to be immediate, will begin its operations in the Kyouksay district, and will take the other districts in Upper Burma in the order of their fertility, and will employ as many Upper Burmans in the work as can be persuaded to join them. It is anticipated that to complete the Cadastral Survey of Upper Burma will take ten years; a similiar period being also required for the geographical map. At the same time, another party will be detailed to produce the details of maps of each district separately for office use. It is confidently expected that when Upper Burma has been completely surveyed the revenues of the districts will increase, and will prove to be a far more flourishing and revenue-yielding source than any part of Lower Burma.

SEPOYS AND THEIR SAVINGS.

(Times of India.)

We can hardly credit a story that comes to us from an up-country station, only recently added to this Presidency. The facts briefly stated are these:—A sepoy had deposited his savings from time to time in the Post Office Savings Bank, and had thus become the possessor of a fair sum of money for a man in his position. When making his first deposit he had given the usual declaration and specimen of his signature (in Gurmukhi be it observed) to the Post Office for record—this latter precaution being generally considered a safeguard against the fraudulent withdrawal of the money deposited by others than the rightful owner. In this case, however, it does not seem to have been successful. The sepoy one day missed his pass-book from his house, and on notice being given at the Post Office was informed that the amount standing to his credit had been withdrawn. The signature to the withdrawal, or rather what purported to be the signature, was in the Nagari character. The Post Office disclaimed responsibility for the money thus irregularly disbursed, and the case was referred through the military authorities to Government, who have upheld the views of the Postal Department, against the military authorities. The contention of the Post Office that they are not responsible seems to us to be about as reasonable as it would be for a banking corporation to ignore its responsibility if it cashed a cheque signed in German characters against the account of an English client whose registered signature was in English. A clever forgery, or for the matter of that with an inexperienced or careless staff, a clumsy forgery, might be paid in error, and the cleverer the forgery, the more venial the error as far as the clerk was concerned; but a payment to a signature in a foreign character could only be gross carelessness or connivance—if held to be anything else it seems a farce that a specimen of each depositor's signature should be recorded. In this case, moreover, the trouble requisite to ascertain the truth and identify the would-be withdrawer with the depositor, when so strange a divergence in the signature appeared, would have been infinitesimal. A letter to the commanding officer of the regiment would in a case of this sort have produced an answer directly the necessary inquiries had been made, and the withdrawer might have been detained on some plausible pretext pending the receipt of a reply. In fact, in some stations, we believe, it is customary for the postmaster, so as to avoid mistake when a large number of sepoys are depositors, to ask that intending withdrawers may be furnished with a memo from their wing commanders that Private So-and-So wishes to close or make a withdrawal of so much from his account. This is, of course, not required by any regulations, but asked for by the postmasters to protect themselves from error, and presumably the consequences thereof, and given by the military officers in the interests of their men. But to return to the case in point. It may be said that the owner of the pass-book should have taken better care of it; but, no doubt, he took the best care of it he could. Every sepoy cannot afford a Chubb safe, nor would he be allowed carriage for it if he could. The best course, doubtless, is that which obtains, we believe, in some regiments in which the men are allowed to place their pass-boks in the treasure chest for safe custody under the same limitations as regards responsibility that are laid down in regulations for private money. Still, whatever may be the blame attachable to the owner of the Savings Bank pass-book in this particular instance for not looking more carefully after his property, we cannot see that that absolves the Post Office from their responsibility for having paid out money entrusted to their care on a draft or receipt bearing, to put it mildly, a signature so informal that it should at once have aroused their suspicions. The matter has, we believe, been sent on for the consideration of the Government of India, and we hope that in the interests not only of the public, but of the Post Office Savings Banks, they will see fit to form a different opinion to that expressed by the local Government.

LOCAL MILITARY EXPENDITURE.

(Pioneer.)

It is to be hoped that the Army Circular, reprinted in a recent issue, empowering the Commanders-in-Chief of the three Presidencies to sanction expenditure up to certain limits without reference to their Civil Governments, will help to convince a class of critics that the policy of doing away with Presidency distinctions in military matters does not mean centralisation. The truth is that decentralisation in these things was abolished years ago when the management of the army finance was amalgamated in the hands of an imperial department by the fusion of the Accounts establishments of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay. What remained was merely a shadow, a troublesome fiction involving endless correspondence, cross-references, circumlocution and delay. By placing the military commanders up to a certain point in direct relations with the Controllers-General this round-about procedure is to that extent got rid of, and the change may be considered an unmixed benefit. It will give the Commanders-in-Chief as things now stand, or the Army Corps Generals as they will some day be, a greater latitude than they ever had under the Presidency system, and with the power over expenditure comes the motive for economical management. The principle is exactly the same as led to the greatest of reforms in modern Indian administration, the decentralisation of the Provincial finances. As long as a military commander had no power of the purse his only line of conduct was to ask for all that he could get, or rather a great deal more than he could ever expect to get in the hope of getting some. When he is given the power of laying out a certain sum on his own responsibility he has an object for economising on matters of smaller importance that he may have the more to spend on the purposes which he sets particular store by. This desirable position of affairs is what the Army Circular evidently aims at bringing about, and it is only one instance to show the absurdity of the cry that the military policy of the Government of India spells centralisation. In the equally important matter of patronage the Army Corps commander whom the scheme contemplates would be a far bigger man than the Presidency Commander-in-Chief of the system which is already bit by bit passing away, albeit the old names may remain in use for some time longer.

INDIA SINCE THE MUTINY.

(Bombay Gazette.)

A generation has passed since the Government of India was transferred to the Crown, and the opportunity has been taken by the Secretary of State to publish a brief review of some of the results of the administration during that time. No Native State has been annexed, and the map of India would present the same features in 1889 as it did in 1858, were it not for the small acquisitions at the foot of the Bhutan Hills and the parts around Quetta, for the defence of the frontier. Upper Burma also has been forced upon us; but that can scarcely be said to form part of India proper. On the other hand, numerous petty States which have been administered by Government while the young princes were under tutelage have been restored, sometimes unfortunately to the misgovernment denounced by Sir Lepel Griffin. Notably, Mysore, with a revenue and population exceeding all other acquisitions, has been restored to a Native dynasty in faithful pursuance of the policy of self-denial inaugurated by the Queen's Proclamation; and Baroda was restored after its ruler had forfeited his title to his throne. In internal administration the great work of the census of 1871, followed by the more careful examination of 1881, has afforded the most accurate information of the numbers and density of the population, and of their general distribution and occupation. Latterly the condition of the people has formed the subject of careful inquiry and elaborate report, while definite proposals have been formulated for the relief of the congested districts, and Government is now in the position of an able physician who has patiently studied the causes and symptoms of disease and can prescribe a suitable remedy with some confidence of success. For the benefit of the public and the cause of science, the facts regarding the rainfall, the crops, the course of prices, the movement of traffic, and births and deaths are published regularly. With a view to efficiency, and yielding to the cry of "India for the Indians," the employment and the pay of Natives has been largely, perhaps too largely, increased, to the exclusion of Europeans and Eurasians from the uncovenanted services, which is more than a doubtful gain, and which the Public Service Commission has proposed to remedy. The work of the different departments has increased fourfold, and has been met by the grant of power and responsibility to heads of departments. In finance the local Governments have secured a large measure of freedom within the limits of their assignments. Magistrates and Judges have larger summary powers, and the indulgence of appeals has been restrained, while the Municipalities and District Boards do a large amount of local work which formerly devolved upon the executive.

In Legislation this period of thirty years has given birth to those great codes which are the glory of India. A chapter on Civil Wrong and others on Insurance and on Carriers have been proposed, but for the time being are not forced upon public attention. Every Government has its special land law, and almost every department has its special Act, so that for clearness and facility of reference to the law no country is perhaps on an equality with India. This simplification of law has enabled Government to appoint a large number of Native Judges and Magistrates whose training in their legal duties can now be far more satisfactorily secured. With increasing experience they receive higher powers and carry out their duties with intelligence and honesty. The Supreme Courts, with their old-world procedure so ill-adapted to India, have been abolished, and High Courts administering a rational procedure have been substituted, while in the districts the judicial service has been separated from the revenue with a view to secure a property-trained staff for the administration of justice. The Magistrates are distinct from the police, and rarely interfere with executive matters, and the entire separation of the Magistrates from the executive police would be in most parts of India a nominal reform. The police is still a weak point in the administration, detective ability is small, and great reliance is placed upon confessions. It is so much easier to beat a man to make him confess than to walk about in the sun to collect evidence. Yet the organisation has vastly improved, and dacoities and other forms of forcible lawlessness have been suppressed. India is now as peaceful and free from violent crime as it ever will be. The condition of jails has been greatly improved, and the fear is that a prisoner's life is too easy, and wanting in deterrent influence.

While British India has been rendered peaceful and directed to industrial pursuits, the condition of Native States has not been neglected. The influence and example of upright and energetic Political Residents have been employed in pressing upon the attention of princes those reforms which are the outcome and indications of good government. It is not an easy task to curb their extravagance and induce them to apply their revenues to those useful purposes which tend to improve the condition of their people, to make justice regular and pure, to foster education, to promote public works, and to encourage trade. Yet much has been accomplished. There is not a Native State which does not show signs of good government, although the results attained in some are far better than those achieved in others. Roads have been made, and railways are rapidly following, trade restraints are being withdrawn, the police has been improved, and the grosser forms of injustice are compelled to be put out of sight. In the large imperial items of revenue, such as opium, salt, and liquor, satisfactory arrangements have been made with the States, and they do not give much cause for the interference of Government. A great deal remains to be done, to reduce taxation, and to improve the administration of justice; but what has been done is an earnest of that which will be done. No Native State can be allowed for long to lag behind in the march of improvement. Yet, after all, the golden age of a Native State is when its administration lapses to the dominant power during a long minority. Then, reforms can be introduced rapidly, and the State brought into order and in a line with British districts can be restored with guarantees that the arrangements made shall be respected and continued.

The lessons of the Mutiny have not been forgotten. The English army of 40,000 men has been increased to 72,000, and the Native Army of 250,000 men has been reduced to 152,000, and out of 103 batteries of artillery 88 are manned by Europeans. But this force, numerically small, is better armed and better equipped, and with the assistance of the railways can be concentrated on any point with the utmost facility. Three thousand soldiers suffice for Bengal, and the rest of the army is available for more turbulent provinces. Twenty thousand Volunteers make a satisfactory auxiliary force, and a native Reserve is being created. The questions of transport and commissariat are not easy of solution, but great improvements have been made, and perfection is aimed at. The Staff Corps has come into existence within the last thirty years, and when cured of its superabundance of Generals and its expensive retiring allowances, will not on the whole be a disappointment to its originators. The position of the officers in it has improved. The possibility of a Russian attack on India is now admitted; the indolent security in which we were lulled has been dispelled, and we have endeavoured to make the North-West impregnable. We have now opposed to Russia a line of formidable defences, outside of which is a friendly Afghanistan, and inside is a host of British troops, intrepid English, sturdy Sikh, and active Gurkha, ranged under the flag which to them has been the signal of victory for generations. Emphatically peace and public works has been the motto of the last thirty years, and beneficent reforms have followed in their train.

GOLD IN CHOTA NAGPUR.

(Englishman.)

Standing on the top of Desna Hill and looking north on a hot day one sees below in the distance a line of moving air shimmering in the heat over the horizon of the hills. This airy line is something more, however, than the dazed atmosphere of a summer noon. It marks the 23 degrees 5 minutes parallel of north latitude, and by a strange coincidence the northern boundary of the auriferous tracts of Chota Nagpur. North of the line, the geologist tells us, lies the gneiss country, where gold is rarely found; but south across the Manbhum border and into Singbhoom and Lohardugga stretches a mighty belt of submetamorphic rocks,—the magnesian and mica schists, the quartzites and slates which indicate a country rich in gold. Twenty-two miles broad is this belt from north to south, and it streches away into the distance right and left with the long lines of green hills running east and west, softly curved hills contrasting strongly with the bare rocky fantastic gneiss, and bringing to the instructed eye a suggestion of the goldfields of the Darwars—the mines of Ooregaum and Maisur. Sonapet, the valley through which flows the "Golden River," lies in the middle of the belt, shut in by the jungle and by hills that rise three thousand feet above the sea. To the official geologist and the District chronicler as well as to the wild people who wash for gold in the stream its repute has long been known, but to the outside world as little as most things in Chota Nagpur.

In no other country but Bengal would this goldfield have been so long left unexplored. Some years before 1854 nuggets were found there, according to Colonel Haughton, but the finder never divulged the secret of the exact spot. Since then men who knew, men who had dug for gold in Africa and Australia, have come and seen and believed, but failed to get fair terms from Government. "Let us see what you find and we will tell you our terms," said a scornfully indifferent bureaucracy. Whereupon the "knowing ones" have sworn not loudly but deeply, and have fallen back for a time on the "interloper's" great resource in those parts. They "caught coolies," and, having saved enough for a passage whence they came, have departed silently, thinking "the time was not yet." The valley is well supplied with all the miner can desire,—timber and fuel, water for sawing and crushing, good clay for bricks and tiles, kunkar for chunam, limestone for lime, stone for building not far away, and labour obtainable from the Bengal mining districts for a third of the cost of underground labour in the goldfields of Southern India. Two things only were wanting, railway communication and reasonable terms from Government. The Bengal-Nagpur Railway will pass within twelve miles of Sonapet, and a Syndicate has purchased the Sonapet goldfield. At their request, conveyed through Dr. King, Director of the Geological Survey of India, Mr. P. Bosworth Smith, late Government Mineralogist to the Government of Madras, has visited, inspected, and reported on the property. His opinion on the mining prospects is as follows—"There are numerous reefs of blue quartz in the Sonapet Valley, and these are certainly auriferous. The presence of nuggets of gold in the alluvium of the stream proves that the reefs here contain gold, as the boundaries of the valley form the watershed of the Sona River, so that no gold can be carried in from elsewhere. Dr. Ball speaks of the nuggets being encased in quartz, but the nugget found by Mr. Berrill has no quartz attached. The nugget weighs nearly an ounce (18½ dwts)., and this is far heavier than anything that is found in the South Indian goldfields. Mr. Bruce Foote, after his extensive examination of the Maisur gold tracts, told me that he had seen no gold bigger than a small bean, and, in my own experience, I have found nothing larger than ten grains." This is, on the whole, a very favourable opinion, but it does not touch on the question of quantity.

Mr. Bosworth Smith's report, however, continues:—"The blue reefs of Sonapet are, on the average, from two to three feet wide. The soil under the outcrop that contains the broken up quartz from the reefs in all cases gives good shows of gold. It must be borne in mind that generally the quartz from the surface outcrop of a reef contains very little or generally no gold. From Sonapet we have a surface quartz from Dholbonga village assaying a little over 3½ dwts. This is an excellent promise of better things when the reefs are tested in depth." During Mr. Bosworth Smith's stay at Sonapet he examined three sets of reefs, the Chatter Hassa, the Dholbonga, and the Tireldeh. It is close to the Chatter Hassa that the Natives wash for gold, and here, they state, many large nuggets are obtained. "It was when digging a pit in one of these that the nugget before mentioned was found.

Digitized by Google

There are three large well-defined reefs of what an Englishman would call 'lodes.' The three reefs can be seen in a bend of the nullah east of Rolandih. Quartz taken from the western reef at the bottom of the stream cutting gave an assay value of very nearly two ounces of gold per ton. This, as it is, will pay handsomely. The reef, which is probably over half a mile in length with its breadth of three feet and assay value of two ounces, will give an enormous quantity of quartz for crushing. Here, then, are three reefs, any one of which will yield stone sufficient for a single mine, two out of which have been proved to contain stone in paying quantities." Surface quartz from the Dholbonga reef, we are told, gave an assay value of 3½ dwts. to the ton. There are other reefs of blue quartz near Tirildeh which, Mr. Bosworth Smith says, are evidently of the same nature as the Chatter Hassa. "These three sets of reefs," he concludes, "have been specially mentioned, but it must not be supposed that these are by any means all that were seen in the valley, and there are also reefs in the hills. Blue quartz that a miner from Kolar would call 'very kindly looking stone' is found in all the streams and dry nullahs, and it will certainly be some time before the whole value of the property is known." The prospect of a new departure in gold-mining in India is not, perhaps, likely to dazzle anyone after the experience of Madras. Gold mines are still, as ever, a "wicked charm" wherewith to witch the credulous dupes of avarice, but recent lessons are still fresh in the public mind, and, truth to say, Indian mines stink in the nostrils of the English investor. Still, while it would be premature to say anything as to the probable future of the Sonapet valley, it must be borne in mind that the property is held by a Syndicate, and that the public is not yet asked to participate in the venture. True, we already hear of buying and selling transactions, but these are matters with which the public has really no concern, and we must wait to see how the Syndicate propose to work their business. All that there is to go upon at present is the report which we have quoted, and which presents things in a very favourable light, and it may safely be said that a good deal more information on the subject will be required before many of the older residents in Calcutta and other parts of the province will be convinced that "Rural" Bengal is destined to dim the record of Ballarat and emulate the glories of California.

BENGAL.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal will leave Darjeeling on Nov. 1st for a short tour in Sikkim previous to his return to Calcutta. His Honour will be accompanied by Sir Alfred Croft, K.C.I.E., Mr. A. W. Paul, C.I.E., Deputy Commissioner, Mr. J. C. White, and Mr. P. C. Lyon, Private Secretary. The route to be taken will be through Pemionchi, Tumlong, Guntak, and Pedong, and the party will reach Calcutta vid Daling Fort and Jalpaiguri on November 18th. The Raja of Sikkim will come out from Guntok to meet his Honour at Tumlong, where a halt will be made for one day.

THE tests carried out with arms in India last year show that in Bengal 72,537 bayonets and 13,110 sword-bayonets were tested up to May 30th, and the approximate percentages of failures were 9·22 and 1·25, respectively. As regards swords, 1,589 were tested, of which 746 failed—an approximate percentage of 47. Replying to a telegram asking whether there was any foundation for a report that of 500 swords of the Madras Cavalry, recently tested, half were broken or bent, the Secretary to the Government of Madras, Military Department, informed the Secretary to the Government of India at the end of May that the swords of the 3rd Madras Cavalry were tested in September, 1887, and 134 failed; those of the 2nd Lancers were tested in April, 1888, and 70 failed; those of the 4th Light Cavalry in February, 1881, when 49 failed. Swords of the 1st Madras Lancers were not tested, pending instructions from England.

THE Englishman of the 7th states:—"At yesterday's meeting of the Jute Mills' Association it was decided to immediately suspend the 'minimum selling rates' for jute goods. A committee was also appointed to draw up a revised list of rates, which are, we understand, to be based on the actual net cost of the manufactured article, and will be subject to periodical revision according to variations in the price of raw jute. So many factors will have to be allowed for in a calculation of this kind that the practicability of the idea may well be doubted, and we are persuaded that the Committee will find its task to be even more difficult than at first sight appears. The public will, however, be chiefly interested in the fact that the representatives of the Associated Mills have at length taken what seems clearly to be the wisest course for putting an end to a situation in which successive applications of short time had brought no real relief."

ACCORDING to the latest estimates, the outturn of the indigo crops this season will be 138,000 maunds, or nearly 6,000 maunds more than the actual outturn of last year. The increase is confined to Bengal, for the outturn from Behar, owing to the floods and the bad produce of the khoontees, will be at least 10,000 maunds less than that of last year, while the yield from the North-West and Benares will also show a shrinkage.

THE report is published of a deserter from the 2nd Battalion Oxfordshire Light Infantry, Private Charles Richard West, who "left the house of Mr. Charles James Fox, Bangalore, on the 5th instant, in company with Miss Fox, aged fifteen years nine months," and has not since been heard of.

THE Mysore Government received Rs. 33,433 as royalty for gold mining in the State in 1887-88, and Rs. 1,08,526 in 1888-89. The gold obtained by the various Kolar Companies weighed 15,403 ozs. in 1887, 35,073 ozs. in 1888, and 64,000 ozs. in the first nine months of 1889. The total yield for the current calendar year will probably amount to 72,000 ozs. The Mysore Government will receive as royalty the equivalent of 5 per cent. of the yield, say 3,600 ozs., worth upwards of Rs. 2,00,000, for the twelve months. If, therefore, the yield of gold for the official year 1889-90 may be estimated at 72,000 ozs., the Mysore Government will receive about three and a half lakhs of rupees as royalty for the three years 1887-88 to 1888-90, from a part of its territory, that was sheer waste before British enterprise undertook to develop it.

HEAVY rain has fallen at short intervals around Gooty during the last three weeks, and the numerous tanks in the neighbourhood have consequently been filled to the brim. On Tuesday three of the largest of these tanks breached. The water from one of them overflowed the railway embankment, and washed away some of the ballast about two miles north of Rayalcheru Station. Afterwards 100 feet of the bund breached, and the water that escaped rushed down the valley, and rose to the level of the rails, where it again touched the line about seven miles nearer Madras. The water from the second tank struck the railway bridge, consisting of four sixty-four feet girders, that crosses a small river about a mile north of Gooty, carrying away the south abutment and first pier, so that the girder spanning the two southern openings has fallen. The bridge was erected nearly twenty years ago, and hitherto a three-feet flood was the highest that had been recorded. On Tuesday, however, there was probably a ten-feet flood. The calingula of a third tank, over the crest of which the water rose six feet, was breached, and the line washed away in places close to Patakottacheru Station. The villages in the neighbourhood are swamped. A special train with coolies was despatched this morning from Madras to Gooty, and it is hoped that the repairs to the bridge will be completed in four of five days. Meanwhile, passengers and mails will be transhipped, and conveyed across the gap. We stated yesterday that the "evening mail which left Madras on Wednesday at 5 P.M. did not reach Gooty till 3.20 P.M." This was incorrect, as the train arrived at 8.20 A.M. yesterday, or was delayed rather less than two hours on that portion of its journey.

BOMBAY.

(Oct. 25.)

THE REV. A. C. LOCHEE, M.A., will officiate as Chaplain of Dharwar.

THE Chinchli Agricultural Horse and Cattle Show will be held on February 6th next.

MESSRS. C. H. A. HILL, C.S., S. R. ARTHUR, C.S., M. C. GIBB, C.S., AND H. O. QUINN, C.S., have been appointed Assistant Collectors at Rutnagherry, Poona, Ahmednuggur and Ahmedabad respectively.

MR. H. A. ACWORTH, C.S., on his return from leave, is appointed to act as Collector and Magistrate of the district of Surat, District Registrar and Agent for the Governor, Surat, and to be Member and President of the Local Board established for the Surat District.

WITH reference to Clause 195 of India Army Circulars of December, 1888, his Excellency the Governor in Council has been pleased to sanction the Bombay Light Horse being classified as cavalry. Accordingly the rules under Class A for the equipment, &c., of Volunteer Light Horse, notified in the above quoted clause, will apply to the corps.

ON a representation made by M. Gasselin, the late Consul for France, now in Europe, the Academy of France has been pleased to confer upon Mr. Jehangeer Edaljee Davar the honorary secretary of the Cercle Litteraire, the Cross of the Officer of that Academy for his meritorious services in promoting the cause of French literature in Bombay.

THE work of erecting the new Byculla Station cannot be pushed on with until the question of removing the Vehar water main is settled. The project for separating the passenger engines from the goods engines, and building a new shed and yard for the latter, will shortly be submitted to Government for their consideration and sanction.

H. H. THE MAHARAJAH HOLKAR is having a special saloon carriage built for his private use by the B. B. and C. I. Railway at a heavy cost. The carriage when completed will, at the Maharajah's request, be kept at the Khandwa Station of the G. I. P. Railway, and to carry out this arrangement the agnet of the latter company has been addressed on the subject of erecting a special shed and siding for the safety of the saloon, the company charging a certain rental for doing so. The cost of the shed, &c., has been estimated at Rs. 4,600.

THE new Police Act will shortly be introduced into the Bombay Presidency. Before, however, this is done, the Government are desirous of amalgamating those outlying districts traversed by the G. I. P., which are not at present under the control and management of the Superintendent of the Railway Police, with those now forming the jurisdiction of that officer. The only difficulty will lie in getting the Nizam's Government to hand over those possessions, now controlled by his Highness's Police, to the G. I. P. Railway Police authorities; but this will, in all likelihood, be overcome in the long run. This question was mooted by the Government in 1883, but from some cause or other fell through.

THE Consulting Engineer for Railways on his last inspection of the G. I. P. Railway brought to the notice of the agent the advisability of affording better accommodation for Europeans at Dhond junction. At present European travellers from Poona and Ahmedabad, proceeding to Dhond, are greatly inconvenienced by the want of commodious waiting and resting rooms, and this is chiefly felt during the trooping season. The proposal made by the Consulting Engineer is to erect separate rooms for the use of both European and Native travellers, and the matter is now engaging the attention of the agent.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week:—More or less rain during week throughout Presidency proper, except Kaira, Tanna, Baroda, and Kattywar. Total fall sufficient except in two talukas of Khandeish and one of Nassik. Crops damaged by rats, locusts, and other insects in parts of Sind. Jowari and bajri in one taluka of Satara and crops generally in one taluka of Dharwar injured by excessive rain. Standing crops otherwise good, except in two talukas of Khandeish. Harvesting of early crops and sowing of late crops progressing generally. Late sowing retarded by excessive rain in parts of Belgaum and through fear of damage by locusts in parts of Shikarpore. Fodder scarce in one taluka of Dharwar; sufficient elsewhere. Agricultural stock good except in two talukas of Kurrachee and one of Khandeish.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

MAJOR-GENERAL A. PERKINS succeeds Sir Charles Gough in the Lucknow Command in April.

A FURTHER supply of five hundred Punjab coolies have been collected by the Commissariat Department, and will leave Rawul Pindi for the Chin Expedition in a few days.

MESSRS. SMITH AND Co.'s Auction Mart at Allahabad, with all the valuable property stored therein, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 17th inst. The loss is estimated at a lakh of rupees.

THE Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne, with a large gathering of the Simla public, witnessed a spirited game of Ladakhi polo at Annandale on Saturday afternoon. The teams had been got together by Colonel Woodthorpe.

A STORY comes from the North-West Provinces that ought surely to relate to Burma. On the 17th ult. a number of dacoits entered the Philibhit District and began plundering the rice crops, doing great harm to the cultivation. The District Superintendent of Police went out, and came suddenly upon their camp. A fight ensued, in which Mr. Gregson, District Superintendent of Police, and Mr. Toulmin, Reserve Inspector, did good service. Twenty-three of the dacoits were captured, who now await trial.

THE Sanitary Board which was constituted last year in the North-West Provinces has been so remarkably silent in its operations that most people have probably forgotten its existence. As a matter of fact, it is reported numerous meetings have been held during the past month or two at Naini Tal, and it is understood that the main lines on which it is proposed that legislation affecting village and rural sanitation should proceed have already been sketched. The criticism to which the Bombay Bill has been exposed, however, seems to have convinced the Board that secrecy is a great part of sanitary science.

THE Kurrachee mail train arrived in Lahore more than two hours late on the 15th, owing to a tragic occurrence on the line. Mrs. Hebbert, wife of the driver of the train, was travelling with her child in an intermediate class carriage, fourth from the engine, when her clothes were set on fire by a spark. She first tried to extinguish the fire, but being unable to do so, in her confusion she threw the child on to the floor of the carriage and jumped out herself. The guard saw her do so, and tried to stop the train, but it was not brought to a standstill till it reached Landhi railway station. When the driver discovered it was his wife who had jumped out he took his engine and brake-van, and also his child who was found senseless, back to the spot where his wife was lying. He found her senseless, and seeing that no medical help could be had at Landhi Station, proceeded straightforward to Kurrachee Cantonment. His child died on the way, and his wife is in a critical condition.

MARRIAGE OF SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN.

ON the afternoon of Saturday last, at St. James's, Piccadilly the marriage was solemnised of Sir Lepel Henry Griffin, K.C.S.I., and Miss Marie Elizabeth Leupold, daughter of Mr. Ludwig Leupold, merchant, of Cornigliano, Genoa, now residing at Hillthorpe, Norwood. The service was conducted by the Rev. T. J. Evans, M.A., of St. James's. The bride was given away by her father. Captain Rawlinson acted as best man. The bride wore a travelling dress of white cashmere, and a Gainsborough hat trimmed with ostrich feather and pale primrose ribbon and white fur. She was attended by her sister as bridesmaid, attired in white cashmere and large hat to match. Immediately after the ceremony Sir Lepel and Lady Griffin left for Paris.

DEBT-EMBARRASSED CLERKS AND OTHERS.

The following resolution is published in the Gazette of India:—In a resolution of January last, the Governor-General in Council invited the attention of the local Governments to the imperative duty which devolves on them of taking severe notice of the conduct of clerks and other employées who allow themselves to fall into embarrassed circumstances, and it was pointed out that assistants in Government offices should clearly understand that, if they voluntarily contract debts or obligations which they are unable to meet, they render themselves liable to summary dismissal. His Excellency in Council has reason to fear that the tenor of these orders has not always been properly understood, and desires to supplement them by more definite instructions as to what constitutes such a state of indebtedness as to render it undesirable that a person should be retained in the public service. The Governor-General in Council accordingly directs that where half the salary of a Government official is constantly being attached for debt, or has been continuously under attachment for more than two years, or is attached for a sum which, under ordinary circumstances, it will require more than two years to repay, a full schedule of the officer's debts should be obtained by the head of his office, and the case should be dealt with in the same way as if the debtor had taken advantage of the Insolvency Court. In such cases it should be specially ascertained what is the proportion of debts to salary, and the extent to which they detract from the debtor's efficiency as a public servant, whether the debtor's position is irretrievable, and whether it is desirable under the circumstances to retain him in the particular post he occupies, or in any position under Government.

MESSRS. WM. JAS. AND HY. THOMPSON state that the last estimate of total tea crop is 97 million lb., cabled by Reuter this week; from other sources they have received cablegrams estimating the crop between 96 and 100 millions, from which they conclude that some five or six millions more than last year, at the least, may be reckoned upon. At the present rate of consumption twelve millions more might be used.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR OF WALES will, during his visit to the Maharana of Oodeypore, unveil a statue of the Queen, by Mr. C. B Birch, A.R.A. The statue is nine feet in height, and is executed in Carrara marble. On the front of the pedestal there is a raised bronze panel, containing the following inscription:—"This statue of Queen Victoria, Empress of India, has been erected by Maharana Futteh Singh, C.C.S.I., in commemoration of the Jubilee Year of Her Majesty's reign, and as a mark of her Highness's loyalty and devotion.—June, 1887

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE PENNYCOMEQUICKS.*

What are the characteristics of a good novel? Some persons will reply, "exciting incidents, blood-curdling adventures—never mind whether the scenes be natural or the reverse so long as the reader be stirred." With this school of romance we have no sympathy. To us there is in works written from this standpoint such an air of unreality that we can never bring ourselves to fancy that the tale is true; and this atmosphere of unnaturalness is fatal to any sound enjoyment in the realms of fancy. Others will proclaim that a work of imagination must be a reflex of everyday life—the characters must "live and move and have their being," just as in the ordinary everyday world—the secret of success in this case being rather how things are put than what they are in themselves.

Judged from this standpoint, Mr. Baring Gould's last novel, entitled "The Pennycomequicks," must be pronounced to stand high in the ranks of fiction. The incidents are such as might fairly and reasonably happen on any, if not on every day. There are, it is true, adventurous scenes, but only just such as might fall to the lot of, at least some of, his readers; and interspersed are remarks on the motives and actions of mankind, severe, incisive, and true, which proclain Mr. Baring Gould to be an accurate observer and a deep thinker. But over and above all these characteristics the author possesses the invaluable power of raising up involuntary like or dislike on the part of the reader towards the various characters placed on the scene. A few touches serve to create aversion, while a plain sentence or two gives rise to admiration and esteem. This is as it should be. But there is more to follow. The art of "surprises" is difficult of attainment, for either the course of the narrative leads irresistibly to certain easily foreseen results, or the improbable comes prominently to the front. Mr. Baring Gould avoids both dangers, and the "Pennycomequicks" must be pronounced a distinct success. Perhaps, on the whole, the work is somewhat unduly long. Compression would have been a distinct advantage; but in modern times the law as to "three volumes" is somewhat precise, and does not allow much latitude to a writer who, as a caterer for public patronage, must of necessity bow to the wishes of the hour. And if in the present instance he errs, his offence is shared by the large majority of rivals who do likewise.

"Russian Pictures: Drawn with Pen and Pencil by Thomas Michell, C.B.," is one of those admirable works issued by the Religious Tract Society, 56, Paternoster-row, combining within a limited number of pages a great amount of useful, correct, and interesting information. The present volume contains three good maps and 124 excellent illustrations to aid the descriptive letterpress of a country which has been for too long a terra incognita to Englishmen—but a country in which Englishmen, especially Englishmen who have been in India, ought to have the very liveliest interest.

"Successful Advertising: Its Secrets Explained, by Thomas Smith and J. H. Osborne, 132, Fleet-street," is the tenth annual issue of a work which gives an unfailing remedy for making a dull business a profitable one. That remedy is to advertise "carefully and wisely," but boldly, for the man who wants to win money and reputation from the public for his goods or wares must not hesitate to "plunge;" if he does so, he is lost. Advertising to bring success must be followed according to Pope's advice about learning, of which he said that a little was a dangerous thing—"Drink deep or taste not the Pierian spring." And so of advertising—to do it profitably, you must do it profusely—and this little work tells you how to do it to the very best advantage.

The Boys' Own Annual (56, Paternoster-row).—This, the eleventh volume of The Boys' Own Paper, keeps up its well-deserved reputation for excellence of illustration and letterpress, and as being the most popular of the annuals published for the delight and information of "Our Boys." With such contributors to its literary pages as Ballantyne, Cuthburt Bede, General Drayson, David Ker, Professor Hoffman, Jules Verne, and other well-known names, and with artists such as Caton Woodville, Whymper, Wyllie, and a host of clever masters of brush and pencil illustrating those pages, no words are needed to commend the work. It carries with it its own commendation.

The Girls' Own Annual (56, Paternoster-row), which, as a frontispiece, gives a copy of Sant's beautiful picture, "The Soul's Awakening," deserves no less praise. Jean Ingelow's beautiful lines interpreting the picture, of course, find a place in the volume, to which many writers and artists, whose names are familiar as household words, lend their aid—to make it what it is—a most charming annual for girls—healthy in tone, right in purpose, interesting, and instructive.

The November number of Colburn's United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) is a considerable improvement on the October number. A Flag Officer critically discusses the practical results of our mimic warfare in the late Naval Manœuvres, and "C.B." contributes a most excellent Paper on "The Decay of the Regimental System," which should be read far and wide by soldiers, young and old, who have the welfare of their profession really at heart. It is one of the best Papers which has appeared in any military journal for a long time, and ought to increase the circulation of this popular "Service" magazine greatly. There are other Papers which do not strike us as being altogether in place in a professional magazine of this kind, but it must be remembered that an editor has to cater for a variety of tastes, and that tastes differ may be gathered from a sentence in the serial story, "At Last," which concludes its eleventh chapter by informing its readers that the hero, in the hospitable tent of a British officer in South Africa, "felt a curious thrill regaling himself with oysters and bread-and-honey washed down by rum-and-water." A very curious thrill, we should imagine, indeed.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.), in its November number continues to show the progressive excellence which has evidently been the aim of its present editor to achieve since he took this periodical in hand. His own pen, which can write well on many varied subjects, has of course done much to bring about this progress, but he has shown also, his ability as an editor in the tact and judgment he has displayed in the selection of contributions which he monthly places before his readers. In the present issue the professional matters treated of are all of importance and interest to Service readers; and an admirable paper on "Soldiers' Homes and Institutes" is well deserving of perusal. Rear-Admiral Colomb continues to give his very forcible views on the principles and practice of Naval Warfare; Irving Montagu tracks with pleasant pen and clever pencil the further Wanderings of a War Artist, and Carl Siewers translates, by "special permission," the story of the battle of Eckernförde, written by his Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway. The Editor himself gives another of his admirable translations from the Swedish of Runeberg's quaint poems—translations which it is to be hoped will be reproduced in book form; and a number of other very readable articles, well and liberally illustrated, help to make up a most excellent number

THE whole of the Calcutta Municipal Loan for Rs. 11,15,000 has now been taken up at the minimum of 103 fixed by the Commissioners.

THE Englishman understands that the receipts of the English mails to Calcutta are, as a rule, large enough to pay the cost of a special through train to Howrah.

A BANGALORE paper writes:—"Up to date the arrangements about to be made for the reception of Prince Albert Victor in Bangalore will include a garden party at the Residency, a ball by Bangalore society, a Masonic ball and a grand review of the troops in garrison. It is considered probable that the Prince will also visit the Kolar Gold Mines during his tour in the Province. It has not transpired yet as to whether the Maharajah will confine his part of the reception proceedings to the capital and the scene of the Keddah operations."

THE Mysore Government received Rs. 33,433 as royalty for gold mining in the State in 1887-88, and Rs. 108,526 in 1888-89. The gold obtained by the various Kolar Companies weighed 15,403 ozs. in 1887, 35,073 ozs. in 1888, and 54,000 ozs. in the first nine monfhs of 1889. The total yield for the current calendar year will probably amount to 72,000 ozs. The Mysore Government will receive as royalty the equivalent of 5 per cent. of the yield, say 3,600 ozs., worth upwards of Rs. 2,00,000 for the twelve months. If therefore, the yield of gold for the official year 1889-90 may be estimated at 72,000 ozs., the Mysore Government will receive about three-and-a-half lakhs of rupees as royalty for the three years 1887-88 to 1888-90, from a part of its territory that was sheer waste before British enterprise undertook to develop it. The Mysore Budget estimate of revenue for the current year is 127½ lakhs, so the 2 lakhs which may be expected from the Gold Mining Companies at Kolar will represent about 1½ per cent. of the total revenue. The Sirkar can afford to be generous and helpful in its attitude towards the gold-mining industry.

OFFICIAL SECRETS IN INDIA.

THE Government of India, having thought fit to extend the British "Official Secrets Act" to that country, it might have been wiser for the Pioneer not to have availed itself of the opportunity to throw a stone into the glass-houses of its neighbours of the Press. But this was not the opinion at Allahabad, and so the Pioneer came out with the following explanation and homily:—

"The English 'Official Secrets Act,' which is republished in the last Gazette of India, applies principally to the wrongful obtaining of information regarding fortresses, dockyards, arsenals, and ships. But the Act applies also to the obtaining of any document from an office, or the communication to unauthorised persons of knowledge of the contents of State papers, whether such knowledge has been lawfully or unlawfully obtained. The penalties vary from fine or imprisonment, or both, to penal servitude for life, this last applying to cases in which the information is intended to be communicated to a foreign Power. Further, anyone inciting another person to commit an offence under the Act is held to be guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to the same punishment as if he had committed the offence himself. The Act applies to all parts of Her Majesty's dominions, and it will be forthwith re-enacted in India and become part of the legislation of the country. It would certainly seem to be needed, as a regular traffic has sprung up in confidential State papers, the Bengali Press having apparently free access to the most secret despatches and official notes. So far it has been impossible to reach the offenders, but if, as intended, the publication of documents unlawfully obtained is made a criminal offence, the traffic will be summarily stopped. The receiver is always worse than the thief in such cases, but if one or two of the purloiners of despatches could be detected in the first instance, a sharp example might be made of them."

It was not likely that the homily would be allowed to pass unnoticed by the Anglo-Indian journals who may possibly hold even similar views to those held by the Pioneer regarding the Bengali Press, but who do not, like the Pioneer, dwell in a very conservatory of glass in respect to the receipt and publication of official secrets. Of the first to take heed of the Pioneer's morality in this matter is the Madras Mail, whose high and honourable position in Anglo-Indian journalism lend increased weight to the rebuke which it administers to its Allahabad contemporary. Commenting on the extract we have given from that journal, it says:—

"This is too funny! Here is the only journal in the country which has regular and free access to "secret despatches and official notes" applauding the Government which permits such invidious access, for proposing to take power to punish with the utmost rigour of a new law other offenders who by hook or by crook obtain documents of public interest, and publish them forthwith. The Pioneer is 'a receiver,' not of stolen documents, but of special favour, special information, special assistance from the Government; and, according to its own argument, a receiver is worse than the highly-placed official, who, for reasons best known to himself, publishes, by means of the Pioneer, papers, or the digest of papers, that are not public property. If the Finance Member, or the Military Member, or the Law Member, or the Public Works Member of the Viceregal Council may, at his discretion, communicate the contents of any document in his office, or portfolio, to the Pioneer, why should any clerk of his be thrust into jail for communicating some other document in that office, or portfolio, to the Englishman, the Times of India, or the Madras Mail? To whom do the whole of the documents in that office, or portfolio, belong? To the Honourable Member in his private capacity, or to the State?"

This, no doubt, is offering a crucial test, for it cannot be held that such documents or information is the private property of the individual official, but of the State, which entrusts him with the same, and whose confidence he is in honour bound to respect. Taking this view of the case the Madras Mail is, of course, within its argument in putting the matter thus:—"The Departmental subordinate who purloins a copy, or himself takes a copy of an important State paper, and 'conveys' it for a pecuniary consideration to a Bengali journal, is a misguided person; but who will care to say that the chief of a Department who does the 'Pi' a good turn by imparting to it official information of a confidential nature, and is discreetly patted on the back at a convenient season by that paper is a gentleman entirely beyond reproach." Certainly this is a strong way of placing the matter before an independent reasoner; but there is another way of looking at the matter. It may be in the interest of the Government that certain information should reach the public through a respectable, but non-official source. It would not be to the advantage of the Government, and certainly not to the advantage of the Press in India generally, if all intelligence regarding State matters were to be communicated only in the pages of the official Gazette. To the argument that then the Government should place all newspapers on an equal footing, and give one and all the same boon of information without favour or bias, the answer is that the experiment has been tried and failed. Do any of the respectable Anglo-Indian journals desire the resuscitation of the office of Press Commissioner, and the doling out again of the "fatuous flapdoodle" which was wont to be distributed from it? We opine not. Then what is the Government to do? Institute an official Moniteur of its own? This was an idea once seriously entertained in Sir John Lawrence's Viceroyalty, and was strongly advocated by his legal adviser in Council, Sir Henry Maine. Indeed, the idea was advanced so far into practical shape that a paper was drawn out by an eminent Bengal Civilian, entering into details of the working of such a Moniteur, and how it was to be carried on, but the sound and strong commonsense of the late Sir Henry Durand put a stop to the project. He utterly condemned it, as it would have placed the Government in a false position with the free Press of the country, and turned every newspaper into an open foe. But this was almost the state of things when the Pioneer came into existence as the "unbought" supporter of Government. At that time there was a feeling amongst all non-official Europeans in India that their presence in the country was regarded with anything but favour by the official classes, and the Anglo-Indian Press gave expression to this feeling by being generally hostile to the Government in all its ways and doings. The Press, in fact, tried to play the part of "Her Majesty's Opposition," but not always in the most fair or honourable way. The shrewd projector of the Pioneer saw an opportunity of doing a good stroke of business, and wisely availed himself of it. Fixing upon the central position of Allahabad he started a journal there which, in spite of enemies and evil reports, has become a power in the country, and a power which upon the whole has done more good than evil. The circulation it commands and the ability which characterises its working have been recognised in high quarters, and the Pioneer has no doubt been favoured with early official intelligence. But do not officials in this country give certain journals here privileges which they deny to others? What is done in the green tree may be done in the dry, and we do not suppose that officials in India are more ready to tell State secrets to the Press than here. We fully agree with the Madras Mail in condemning the giving and receiving of State secrets not intended to be told; but we cannot be blind to the difficulties which a Government situated like that of the British Government in India is constantly in with regard to its relations with the Press. Better to have a Pioneer than a Moniteur, or even a Press Commissioner.

THE PERILS OF PENANG.—The following account is sent to a Bombay paper by one Captain Marsh. From it will be seen how injudicious it is to be abroad in Penang at two o'clock in the morning:—"I had been for a walk in the country, and lost my way, and so about two o'clock in the morning I sat down under a tree to have a rest, and dropped off into a light sleep. Waking up, to my horror I saw a huge boa-constrictor, about twenty-five feet long, coming down the tree. He came down with lightning speed, and before I had time to get out of the way, he had a turn of his body round my neck and two round my right leg. Fortunately, I always carry a bowie knife about with me at night time, and I had just time to cut him in half as he began to squeeze. I need not say that I released myself and got on to the road as quickly as I could; and I swooned, and was picked up in the morning by a gharry and taken to the General Hospital, where I remained for sixteen days."

THE SIKKIM DIFFICULTY AND THE CHINESE AMBAN.

There recently appeared in the official Pekin Gazette a couple of reports that are worth some comment, from Sheng Tai, the Imperial Resident in Tibet, better known to our Indian fellow-countrymen and through them to people at home as the Amban. The former of the two reports announces the despatch of the customary tribute mission from Tibet to Pekin, under the lead of a Khambu and a Nangso, officials with long drawn-out names and a following of forty persons, lay and clerical. We gather that the Khambu is the clerical head of the mission, representing the Lamas, and the Nangso the lay member, who is always attached to these missions, "and granted permission to trade, in order to display the desire of the Imperial Court that an ample return should be made for what was received." We should gather from this that the Nangso's duty, or part of it, is to make sure that the Khambu is not swindled by the Court officials when he gets to the capital, and that the presents the Emperor returns are fully equal in value to those the Lamas send, a very practical if somewhat sordid precaution. The license to trade, however, goes beyond this, but it is an equally practical provision, and is no doubt granted to all the tributaries of China to induce them not to grumble at the expense and trouble of these periodical missions. It is much cheaper to tempt the tributary States to keep up their missions by allowing them to smuggle without hindrance, than to have to send a body of troops every now and then to remind them of their vassalage. The report that follows the mission one is far more amusing. The Amban mentions that it is his duty to hold an annual review of the Tibetan army, but he has been unable to do it this year, as he has been engaged on the frontier, i.e., in Sikkim, and so he delegated the task to a certain Major Ch'en-k'un. The Major seems to have had an easy task of it, for he reports that the bulk of the forces were also away at the frontier; from which we learn that the ragged regiments met and dispersed by our expeditionary corps on the Sikkim frontier were "the great bulk of the forces of Tibet." Of course, it would never do for the Imperial Resident to report to the Throne that the army of its vassal had been routed and scattered by China's good ally, England. He wraps it up, therefore, in the most diplomatic and sympathetic language, his last paragraph containing the further information that the Tibetan army is not going to fight us any more, which confirms the news we have through India that the trouble in Sikkim is to be allowed to melt away without any definite arrangements for the future being made. This is the delicate fashion in which the Amban describes the defeat and dispersion of the Tibetan army:—"Remarking on the absence from the review of the Tibetan troops, the Resident states that although they have been recalled from service on the frontier, yet they have become so dispirited and enfeebled by the long stay there that they all found it necessary to avail themselves of leave of absence. As their condition was deserving of some sympathy they were exempted from undergoing the present review, but they will, in accordance with previous customs, be called out for the autumn manœuvres.—North China Herald.

RUSSIAN APPREHENSIONS RESPECTING KASHMIR.

(Novoye Vremya.)

The rumours regarding the intentions of the Salisbury Ministry to incorporate Kashmir in the Indian dominions of the Queen-Empress Victoria are beginning to be realised in spite of all the former denials of the Government. The first step has indeed been already taken. The Native "ruler of Kashmir," as Lord Cross, speaking in the House of Lords, described him, "has sent in his resignation," and "this resignation" (?) has been accepted by the British Government. The administration of the country has now been entrusted "to a council composed of Natives, subject to the jurisdiction of the English Resident." Lord Cross, however, still assured his hearers that there exists no intention to annex Kashmir to British India.

Anyone acquainted with the history of the constitution of the British possessions in India as they now exist can only smile, of course, on reading this announcement. In Kashmir is now being repeated to the letter the very same process which has attended the entire series of English seizures of territory in India. The Cabinet of St. James's does not even put itself to the trouble of varying the methods by the aid of which all these annexations have been accomplished. Everywhere and at all times is repeated one and the same tale, which every Anglo-Indian bureaucrat knows by heart, and which, we are told, is gradually bringing about the intellectual development of the Natives. The affair begins with a disagreement between "the Native ruler" and the English "Resident" who receives at a particular moment instructions from Calcutta to conduct himself in the most provocative manner towards the vassal or the "friendly" ruler over whom he has been placed for the purpose of surveillance. As soon as misunderstandings have been thus established and have reached the required degree of tension, a rumour is let out that the Native ruler has concocted a plot to "put an end to" the British Resident by means of poison or some other murderous contrivance. For the most part these rumours are devoid of any foundation in fact. The "ruler" is almost always found to have councillors, who incite him to believe that the course of action of the British Resident springs from purely "personal" motives, and not from the instructions of the British Government, so that if the ruler were to rid himself of a disagreeable supervisor he might confidently expect the deputation of a less hostile Resident to his Court. The Native sovereigns of India have long been prone to readily listen to such counsels; so a corpus delicti is quickly created, and an informant appears at the precise moment at which he may be required with the necessary revelations. The detected ruler is then threatened with severe measures, and he thereupon "sends in his resignation" in order to avoid the bitter fate which he has so richly deserved, and then they either put in his place some kind of unknown infant, as happened at Baroda, or they make over the administration of the country to a council of Natives. In either case the British Resident appears upon the scene as the ruler of the country de facto. Affairs now go on so badly for the Native inhabitants that they begin a little to even desire the substitution of English authority for their new rulers. The change is accordingly made one fine day without any fuss, almost without the knowledge even of the people themselves, and with the full complacency of Europe at large. It may, therefore, be confidently foretold that all this procedure will be repeated in the case of Kashmir, which country is evidently doomed to become a new province of British India.

No one can prevent such a transformation, but any protest against it would be perfectly justified. It seems, indeed, to us that the geographical position of Kashmir should alone compel Russia to busy herself lest this fresh acquisition of England should not imperil Russian interests in Central Asia. Afghanistan on the one side and Tibet on the other must at some time or other become subjects of our closer attention; and it must be our concern that these Asiatic countries are not overtaken by the same or some similar fate as has now fallen to the lot of unfortunate Kashmir.

SETTLING IN KASHMIR.

A Calcutta paper says:—"Any private settler who turns his attention to Kashmir with the serious object of finding a home and a vocation there must take certain precautions to secure his position, or it may be safely predicted that he will come to grief in a very short time. He will lose his capital, and, after an exasperating experience, will have to retire from the field, discomfited. To avoid such a result, he must exercise great care in the selection of the nulla which is to be the scene of his labours, and he must be mindful, in the first instance, that he is entering the country with views very different from those of the ordinary sportsman who has hitherto been his chief predecessor. The sportsman is most anxious to secure an unfrequented nulla in some out-of-the-way corner; but the settler has no similar longing for untrodden ways. It is rather an object with him to keep within touch of the haunts of men, and he will be best suited with a nulla of, say a square mile extent, which is within a single march from a main line of traffic: and in Kashmir a line is, of course, a water-way. It will be important to see that he has free access to the main river, and also that he has secured all forest rights. Otherwise, there will be trouble, and the settler will quickly be saddled with prohibitory transit dues and a crushing tax for timber. A third loophole for the enemy—for it is in this light, unfortunately, that the minions of the State must be regarded by the wary settler—is the possibility of driving the labour from the land. Some protection must be afforded to the villagers, and, if possible, the capitalist ought to be empowered to settle men on his estate. There are many promising nullahs such as we have described lying within easy reach, and thrown entirely out of cultivation in consequence of the merciless greed of the Raj officials. Among the commonest sights in Kashmir are the ruined homestead and the deserted village—eloquent memorials of the plundering and tyranny that has been allowed to go on so long unchecked."

THE MYSORE GOLD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.—This Company has received a telegram, dated the 8th Nov., giving last month's return of gold as follows:—"3,030 tons of quartz produced 3,902 ozs. of gold; also 522 ozs. obtained from tailings; together 4,424 ozs." In the previous month the return was:—"2,942 tons of quartz produced 4,383 ozs. of gold; also 496 ozs. obtained from tailings; together 4,879 ozs."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

MEDALS will be given to the men of the Khyber Rifles by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief at a parade to be held in Peshawar during the Viceroy's tour.

THE 9th Bengal Lancers and the Royal Irish Regiment at Nowshera have been ordered to march to Peshawur for the purpose of a grand parade to be held on the occasion of the Viceroy's visit to the frontier.

THE number of the cavalry from the Punjab States who will share in the march past at the Muridki Camp will be about 1,200. They will be under the command of Major Drummond, Inspecting Officer for Cavalry in these States.

ORDERS have been issued to increase Colonel Tregear's force by the wing of the 2nd Battalion 4th Gurkhas under Major Sir Charles Leslie. Thisincrease to his establishment will enable Colonel Tregear to detach a strong column to the north to punish Sukpilal's sons.

THE Secretary of State for India has decided not to remove Captain Kreyer of the Bombay Staff Corps from the service, and that he is to return to duty after being severely admonished. It will be remembered that Captain Kreyer was the Adjutant of the 17th Bombay Infantry when certain defalcations were discovered in the regimental funds last year, which led to the trial and imprisonment of the commanding officer, Colonel Bulkley. It was thought at first that Captain (then Lieutenant) Kreyer was equally guilty with Colonel Bulkley in the matter of misappropriation of the funds of the regiment, but subsequent events which transpired at the trial of Colonel Bulkley went to show that this was not the case.

AT last there is a single Army List for the whole of India. In place of the old Bengal Army List, the present quarter gives, in the familiar pink covers, but much distended as to bulk, the Indian Army List which includes the whole of the military forces of the Empire. Possibly there are people in Madras and Bombay who will regard this as a dangerous innovation, and bring forward a great many reasons for thinking that the amalgamation of the Army Lists is only one degree less disastrous than the amalgamation of the armies; but for the public at large to have all information on the subject contained in one volume instead of dispersed into three will be an unmixed and immense blessing.

A PLEASANT incident marked the departure of the 8th Hussars from Meerut on Oct. 16th. Just before their starting the non-commissioned officers and men of the 19th Bengal Lancers came forward spontaneously in a body, and expressed their wish to present to the men of the gallant 8th some memento of the five years the two regiments have spent together at Meerut, and of the camaraderie that has existed between them during the whole of that time. It was agreed that the present should take the form of a silver cup to be presented to the Sergeants' Mess of the 8th Hussars, and it is hoped the trophy will be ready to meet the regiment upon its arrival in England. Instances of a friendship like this between British and Native regiments have been known before, but they will never cease to be worth recording.

THE question having arisen as to whether officers of the Volunteer Reserve Force are to be considered eligible to command officers of the Active Volunteer Force, the Government of India has decided in the negative. The reasons for this decision are somewhat as follows:—(I.) The constitution of the Volunteer Reserves is that of a separate body, and, consequently, the form of commission granted to its officers confines their duties to Reserve Volunteers. (II.) The duties required from an officer of Reserve Volunteers are of a less responsible nature. (III.) An officer of active Volunteers, on joining the Reserve Force, is eligible for a step of rank, which circumstance points to the distinction which should be maintained between the two services, as a junior Active Volunteer officer might otherwise, after joining the Reserve Force, command officers who had been senior to him while he was serving in the Active Force.

THE following is from the Civil and Military Gazette:—"Regarding the affray at Chaman, in which Lieutenant Harris was killed, the latest connected account that can be gathered from Chaman states that the affair occurred in the following way. An Afghan appears to have met a transport driver on one mule and leading another a short distance outside the camp. He fired at the driver with a pistol, and compelled him to release the led mule. This he captured and rode off on, and in the meantime the driver galloped back to camp and gave the alarm. Lieutenant Harris, R.E., commanding the half-company Sappers and Miners, and Lieut. Rooke, commanding a troop of Sind Horse, with six mounted sowars, started in pursuit. The moon had just risen, and they overtook the marauder several miles from camp. The two officers had outridden the sowars, and Lieutenant Harris rode at the Afghan and fired at him with a revolver. The man was not struck and fired in return, killing Lieutenant Harris with a ball in the left side. He then took the fallen officer's revolver, and wounded Lieutenant Rooke (whose revolver unfortunately missed fire) in the neck. The sowars then came up, and Ressaldar Abdul Razak shot him in the shoulder and disabled him. He was also wounded in the leg, it is said, by a sabre-cut. Two sowars then returned to camp for assistance, and Lieutenant Moore, R.E., came out with twenty more, and brought in the body of Lieutenant Harris, Lieutenant Rooke, and the wounded Pathan. The ball has been extracted from Lieutenant Rooke's wound, and he is by last accounts doing well. No official detailed account has yet been received."

OBITUARY.

MAJOR-GENERAL EDWARD DAVIDSON, R.E. (late Bengal), who died on the 1st inst., at his residence, Tudor House, Wandsworth, S.W., at the age of 62 years, joined the Service in June, 1847; became lieutenant in August, 1854; captain in August, 1858; lieut.-colonel in January, 1871; colonel in January, 1876; and major-general in November, 1880.

MAJOR WILLIAM DICKSON, Bengal Artillery, died on the 30th ult. at Edinburgh, in his 65th year. The deceased entered the Service in June, 1845; obtained his lieutenancy in February, 1851; captaincy in August, 1858; and his majority in October, 1866. He served in the Punjab campaign, receiving the medal.

SURGEON-MAJOR JAMES ATKINSON WEST SPENCE, late Madras Medical Establishment, died on the 5th inst. at Woburn-place, W.C.

CAPTAIN H. V. BURN, 21st Hussars, died at Bangalore on the 12th ult., aged 32 years. He joined the Army Sept. 14, 1878; became lieutenant, July 2, 1879; and captain, May 1, 1883.

SECOND-LIEUTENANT W. G. MADAN, King's Own Scottish Borderers, died at Cairo, on the 2nd inst., aged 21 years. He was son of the late Rev. Spencer Madan, M.A., Rector of Standen, Staffordshire, and joined the regiment, August 22, 1888.

SECOND-LIEUT. A. A. R. FROOM, R.A., died at Bombay of typhoid fever on the 1st inst., aged 22 years.

MAJOR GENERAL SIR GEORGE HUTT, K.C.B., who died at his residence, Appley Towers, in the Isle of Wight, on the morning of the 27th ult., was a distinguished officer of the old Indian Artillery. He served throughout the Scinde-Afghan campaigns, 1839-44, and the battery which he commanded at the battles of Meeanee and Hyderabad materially contributed by the excellence of its fire to the winning of those brilliant victories. On the field of Meeanee Sir Charles Napier promised him the C.B., which was subsequently awarded to him. Sir George Hutt afterwards held the command of Artillery in the Persian War in 1857, and later rendered good service to Sir Bartle Frere, the Commissioner in Scinde, during the period of the Indian Mutiny. He anticipated the action of the mutinous regiments at Kurrachee by rushing down with his guns to the parade ground, so that when the mutineers came out they found Colonel Hutt and his guns in front of their barracks, with the muzzles of the guns pointed at them, half-an-hour before the time appointed for the rising. Sir Bartle Frere frequently expressed his thanks to him, saying that his action had been invaluable in the preventing of bloodshed. The Bombay Government also testified to his services with their thanks on his retirement from the Bombay Army in 1858. In 1865 he was appointed registrar and secretary to the Commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, a post which he held until 1886, when, as a reward for his long and meritorious services, he was promoted to a Knight Commandership of the Bath. He was born in 1809, and was the youngest son of Mr. Richards Hutt, of Appley, in the Isle of Wight, and a brother of the late Right Hon. Sir William Hutt, K.C.B., M.P. In 1862 he married Adela, daughter of General Sir John Scott, K.C.B., by whom he leaves three sons.

COLONEL WILLIAM MATHIAS, lately in command of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia, and formerly lieutenant-colonel of the 62nd Regiment, died on the 24th ult., at his residence, The Lodge, Addlestone, Surrey, aged eighty. He was the last son of the late Mr. James Vincent Mathias, of Stanhoe Hall, Norfolk, and served in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-46, receiving the medal with one clasp for his services. He also commanded a strong detachment of British troops at the affair of Buddiwal, and was in command at the battle of Aliwal, where he had charge of the howitzers, being named in despatches and made a brevet-major for his services. Later Colonel Mathias commanded the grenadier company of the 62nd Regiment at the battle of Sobraon, where he was wounded. He retired from active service in June, 1854, subsequently serving in and commanding the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia.

DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE.

MR. D. FITZPATRICK, of Drumcree, Killucan, Westmeath, Ireland, writes :—"Thank God the two bottles of Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure got from you cured me of the Asthma. I am over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-five years I have suffered as much from Asthma (I believe) as any other Asthmatic could suffer, often for nights without ever lying on a bed, but I thank the good God I can now sleep as comfortable as I could wish for. I only wish every poor Asthmatic sufferer would give your cure a trial, for it is a great boon."

The public are hereby notified that the above remedy is prepared from a recently improved formula of Dr. Spencer (which has nothing to do with any other formula) and is sold, under his name, by us, who are the sole proprietors, and in no way connected with any other person or firm. We will send our Pamphlet "Asthma, its Treatment and Cure" (Third edition) by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., post free, on application

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow:" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham!—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, wholemeal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE
ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying—"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 1st Nov.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 30th Oct.; and from Calcutta to the 30th Oct.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council on Oct. 24th the Bills amending the Central Provinces Land Revenue and Tenancy Acts were passed.

The new Biluchistan Regulations will be framed on lines to be settled by Mr. Scoble and Mr. Hutchins, the Legal and Home Members of the Supreme Council, after consultation with Sir Robert Sandeman at Quetta. They will probably be passed into law during the cold weather Legislative Session at Calcutta.

His Excellency the Viceroy, after visiting Rawalpindi, arrived at Kohat on Saturday, Oct. 26th, and stopped till Monday morning, when he left for Peshawar, arriving there the same day. He will not hold a tribal durbar at Peshawar, but on his visit to Landi Kotal he will receive the local chiefs and Maliks representing the principal sections of the Afridis and Shinwaris who hold the Khyber. The Viceroy's ride through the Kohat Pass was without incident. Firing had been heard in the Pass on Sunday; it was no doubt owing to some petty tribal quarrel.

The Viceroy will hold a levee at Government House, Lahore, on Nov. 23rd, at ten o'clock in the evening.

Lord Connemara returned to Madras on Oct. 27th from his recent trip up country.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and Lord Reay will arrive in Bombay shortly to meet Prince Albert Victor.

Sir Frederick Roberts has been in Bombay, and has inspected the defences of that city.

The statement that Sir H. M. Durand takes only three months' privilege leave in India instead of furlough to Europe is absolutely incorrect. Having made over charge of the Foreign Secretaryship to Mr. Cuningham he will leave Simla for Europe, taking at least one year's furlough.

Major-General W. K. Elles, C.B., the Adjutant-General, has returned to India, and proceeded to Simla for the moment. He afterwards joins the Commander-in-Chief at Quetta.

General Collen, the Military Secretary, leaves Simla and goes to Mooltan, Quetta, Karachi, and Bombay.

Colonel Tregear and his Staff are timed to arrive at Chittagong on the 11th November, about a fortnight before the arrival of the first batch of troops for the Lushai expedition.

Mr. Hart, the Chinese special representative and intermediary in the abortive Sikkim negotiations, is still at Darjeeling, and the date of his departure for China seems to be still unknown.

Colonel J. G. Forbes, Secretary in the P.W.D. in the North-West Provinces, succeeds Colonel R. Home as Inspector-General of Irrigation, the latter retiring under the fifty-five years' rule.

There has been some alterations in the filling up of certain appointments in the Provinces. Mr. J. W. Muir, on return from leave, obtains the Benares Judgeship, Mr. Macleod, the present incumbent, reverting to Kirwi. Colonel Fendall Currie, on return from leave, takes over charge of the Sitapur Division from Mr. Adams, transferred to Benares, Mr. Ferrar thus remaining at Fyzabad. The Jaunpur district falls not to Mr. Holmes, but to Mr. Bartlett, Mr. Holmes going to Etah.

Captain Charles Norman, one of the special correspondents of the Times, has arrived in Bombay, and will make a tour chiefly among the Native States to describe their military resources.

The latest news from Mazar states that the Amir was starting on a tour through Afghan-Turkistan.

The Government of India have directed the dismissal from the service of Tinkaurie Banerji, a Bengal assistant in the office of the Director of the Public Instruction in Bengal, in consequence of his being the managing proprietor of a Native newspaper called the Praja Bandhu, published in Chandernagore, that has systematically issued seditious articles. The paper itself has been proscribed in British territory.

The contract by which the Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railwry Company undertake to complete the missing link of the Lucknow-Pilibhit Railway from Gola to Gokarnath, and to work the entire line for a period of about thirty years, was ready for signature when the last mail left home.

The Bengal and North-Western Railway Company have applied to the Secretary of State for permission to construct a branch line to the grain mart at Revelgunge, in the Chapra district of Behar, as also the extension to Byram Ghat, which formed part of their original project and was for the moment abandoned.

A shocking railway accident occurred on the East Indian Railway on Oct. 27th. The down mail was leaving Hathras Junction, and, owing to a mistake on the part of the jemadar in charge of the points, was turned into a dead-siding instead of on to the main line. The consequence was that the train dashed into the embankment which terminates sidings; the engine was derailed and the brake-van and succeeding carriage—a third-class reserved for Native females—were smashed. Thirteen women and three children were killed and thirty-nine injured.

The decision to make Saturday the day of departure from Bombay of the English mails all the year round has given widespread satisfaction.

The survey of the railway from Deli to Kotri has been sanctioned, Mr. Croudace being appointed Engineer-in-Chief of the project.

The Marmogoa Railway Company have lately obtained sanction for seven lakhs to spend over the doubling of the railway line and the improvement of the harbour works.

Eight men of the 4th Pioneer Regiment are to be tried by court-martial for insubordination.

The Rangoon Chamber of Commerce is supporting Bengal in protesting against the new order under the Merchandise Marks Act that goods other than British must bear place and country of manufacture.

Mr. Fanshawe's report on the Simla allowance will go the rounds of the Secretariat offices for consideration immediately.

H.H. Maharajah Dhuleep Singh's recent manifesto has met with distinct disapproval by the Sikh community, who state they are true to the British rule, and would fight against him.

News has been received in Calcutta of the death of the Rev. William Smith, Principal of the General Assembly's Institution, who was out on tour in Sikkim, accompanied by the Rev. W. S. Sutherland, of the Kalimpung Mission.

NOTES.

THE news from India by telegraph chiefly concerns the tour of Prince Albert Victor, who is meeting everywhere with a most enthusiastic welcome. This was, of course, to be expected. The English officials throughout the country have long been preparing for what some "gushing" Editors have called "this auspicious event"; and the Natives, who would give the devil himself an enthusiastic reception provided that his coming was celebrated by the giving of gratuitous tamashas, fireworks, and holidays, are described as having shown extraordinary "gush" also in beholding the young Prince. This is pleasant and satisfactory to read, and there is no reason to question the loyalty of those who cheered so lustily that they frightened his Royal Highness's elephant and carriage horses, and very nearly occasioned a serious accident to him.

BUT cheerfully admitting, as one may do, the sincerity of the Native "gush," why should the supposed educated English gentleman who does duty as the Times correspondent at Calcutta think it necessary to wire home such stuff as the following:—"Special interest has attached to the Prince's movements in the Bombay Presidency in consequence of his near relationship to the Duke of Connaught, who has made himself generally popular during his stay in Southern India by his kindness of heart, courtesy of manner, and uncompromising zeal in the performance of his military duties. It would be difficult for the young Prince to find a more fitting guide, philosopher, and friend to introduce him to his first experiences of public life in India, while this fittingness is greatly enhanced by the relationship of the two Princes, which, by importing a sentiment of family affection into the various public ceremonials accorded to the Prince as the heir-presumptive to the Throne, has been instrumental in warming into affectionate zeal the otherwise formal demonstrations of conventional loyalty."

THE correspondent is evidently credulous as to the "loyalty"—which he holds to be "conventional," or at least which would have been so but for the "importing a sentiment of family affection into the various public ceremonials." How was this done? A public ceremonial warmed into affectionate zeal by the importation of a sentiment would no doubt be an interesting exhibition, but it must be seen to be understood. Reading of it in a Times telegram is of no use. It may be possible to comprehend the "gush" of the correspondent, but his grammar is beyond us.

THE Burma correspondent of the same paper is forced at last, we are glad to see, to the conclusion that Upper Burma has not been altogether ruined politically and financially by the administration of British officers. The revenue is increasing, order is being restored, peace and prosperity are looming in the near distance for the people, and justice is being tempered by mercy. As the correspondent cannot well help allowing all this, his little inuendos against the young officers fresh from barrack rooms, who showed want of tact in dealing with dacoits, may be passed over without comment. Upper Burma promises to flourish under British annexation as bravely as has the lower Province and Pegu.

LORD LANSDOWNE has done wisely in seeing with his own eyes the magnificent system of frontier defence which is being prepared in case of Russia or any other Power attempting to dispute with us the sovereignty of India. Holding the Kyber and the Gomal Passes, with Quetta and Peshin in direct railway communication with India, with the Afridis and Shinwaris and all Biluchistan under wholesome British influence, and all the border-line acknowledging our mild and righteous sway, it will be an evil hour for the invader who attempts to break through such a cordon of defence. Fortunately our Native friends of Northern India are men whose loyalty is not that of the lip merely, but of the heart, supported by strong hands, which know well how to wield sword and lance and gun on behalf of those whose salt they have eaten. If Russia ever intends to invade India she had better come viâ Calcutta, and seek alliances with the Bengali Babús, who talk and write against the British Government; she will find only foes now on the Northern frontiers.

THE Government of India has at length made a salutary example of a typical Indian sedition-monger. Mr. Tinkauri Banerji is a Native gentleman who, holding a position in the Government Educational Department of Bengal, thought it not inconsistent with his duty to that Government to revile it continually in a vernacular newspaper, called the Praja Bhandu, which he thought he could safely publish in the French territory of Chandernagore. He has been dismissed from his official post for "disloyalty to the Government whose pay he enjoys," and the sentence is just and well deserved. "But," asks the Pioneer, "what of pensioned officials who write seditious pamphlets?" What, indeed? And the question is the more pertinent when the fact is that the pensioned officials are Englishmen who were long servants of the Government which they now cavil at.

SURELY it cannot be true that the Bombay Government has placed an officer on special duty "to prepare an official memoir of Mr. Crawford's career"? Has not the public in India and England already heard enough about Mr. Crawford and his career? With what object can another history of the man and his doings be ordered to be compiled? That the city of Bombay owes much to Mr. Crawford's energy and ability may be fully granted; but, after what has passed, surely silence is kinder than courting comments which cannot fail to give pain?

A CORRESPONDENT from India writes:—A large number of regiments have received the Martini-Henry rifle, but the great majority are still armed with the Snider. As these Sniders were issued to the Native Army about thirteen or fourteen years ago, it follows that they are no longer in very good order, or to be relied upon to make accurate shooting at any but very short ranges. The process of replacing the Sniders with the newer weapon might certainly be hurried on with advantage. It cannot be for the good of the State to have soldiers armed with untrustworthy rifles, while it is hardly reasonable to expect high musketry proficiency from men who can have no confidence in their own weapons."

ON Sept. 15th a telegram was sent to the Anglo-Indian Press from "Central News, London," to the following effect:—"Sir Wilfrid Lawson is dangerously ill of constipation. Last night he was reported to be sinking fast." We did not expect to find in our Indian files up to date the announcement of the worthy Baronet's decease; but might not those who sent the telegram have mentioned his recovery?

THE Civil and Military Gazette says it is settled that Colonel Conway-Gordon retires in the spring, and adds:—"Before leaving India he will, however, make a short tour, in the course of which he will pay a visit to Bombay. What becomes of his appointment it is as yet impossible to say. Two years ago Colonel Gordon himself recommended its abolition on the ground that there was not sufficient work for him to do."

THE tea cultivation and production of Bengal during the past year show a satisfactory advance over the results of 1887. In 1888 the number of tea gardens in Bengal was 402, and the total area actually under cultivation was 79,962 acres, with an outturn of 22,231,944 lbs. Compared with the report for 1887, we find that there was an increase of seven in the number of gardens, that the area under tea increased by 6,323 acres, and the outturn by 3,128,432 lbs., while the average yield rose from 336·40 lbs. to 345·2 lbs. per acre. Bengal tea gardens are found in the following districts:—Darjeeling (174), Julpigoorie (159), Lohardugga (30), Chittagong (26), Hazaribagh (6), Dacca (6), and the Chittagong Hill tracts (1).

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

Calcutta, Nov. 17.

The public interest during the past week has been centred in Prince Albert Victor and the various festivities, pageants, and military displays in celebration of his visit to India. The enthusiastic demonstration at Poonah has compensated in some measure for the unfortunate fiasco of the reception at Bombay.

The Prince's week has been fully occupied. On Saturday he attended a State banquet and afterwards a reception of Native princes and chiefs. On Monday he held a durbar and afterwards paid a visit to the Parbitti temple, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Lord and Lady Reay. At the foot of the hills Prince Albert Victor and the Duchess of Connaught mounted an elephant, which slipped on some wet steps when near the summit and became frightened. Fortunately the Prince and the Duchess were removed without accident. On returning from the temple the Prince and his party drove in procession through the city to witness the illuminations. On his arrival at Government House the Prince was threatened with another accident. The carriage horses, frightened by the cheering of the crowd, became restive, and in plunging broke the shafts. Fortunately no one was hurt. In the evening he attended a State dinner. On Tuesday morning he held a review of the garrison troops, comprising 6,600 men; in the afternoon he attended the sports and races, and in the evening he was present at a State ball. On Wednesday he witnessed a cavalry parade, attended a State dinner given by the Duke of Connaught, and afterwards witnessed a torchlight military tattoo. The whole garrison marched to the Duke of Connaught's house, preceded by massed bands. Here the various regiment parted, the soldiers bearing torches, whilst the massed bands played a selection of music. On Thursday a team comprising the Prince and three members of his staff played a polo match with the Royal Fusiliers' team, in which the Prince's team proved victorious.

At seven the Prince left Poonah in a special train for Hyderabad, where he arrived at noon on Friday. The Nizam met him at the station. The streets were gaily decorated and lined with Nizamul troops. The Nizam and the Prince drove in the same carriage, with an escort of Hussars and Madras Cavalry, to the palace set apart for the Prince. The afternoon was devoted to receiving and paying visits of ceremony. In the evening the Prince attended a State ball at the Residency. On Saturday he took part in deer-hunting with leopards, and in the evening was present at a State dinner given in his honour by the Nizam. Subsequently there were a display of fireworks and general illuminations.

A public meeting was held in Madras on Tuesday, and various resolutions were adopted with reference to the Prince's coming visit. A reception committee was appointed, and all possible measures were adopted to render his stay in Madras bright and pleasant.

On Thursday the Duke of Connaught inspected the 28th Pioneers before their departure for the Chin-Lushai expedition. The Duke addressed the men in Hindustani, and said, in the course of his speech :—"I feel confident you will display on this occasion also the same bravery invariably shown hitherto. I shall always remember this regiment, as no regiment serving under my command has ever shown greater loyalty or done better service. I regret to say that after to-day, in all probability, I shall have no further opportunity of meeting you."

The Viceroy is still on tour. He arrived at Tank from Pezoo on the 12th and visited the Nawab. On the following day Lord Lansdowne, Sir F. Roberts, and the Lieutenant-Governor rode out to inspect Gomal Pass, and advanced two miles up the Pass, returning by another entrance. They were escorted by the 5th Punjab Cavalry. Next morning they drove to Dera Ismail Khan, which was illuminated. In the evening the Viceroy held a levee and a Durbar next morning, and in the afternoon left for Quetta. The Viceroy will thence return to Lahore, where he will be the guest of the Lieutenant-Governor. Preparations are being made to give him a fitting reception.

Tantia's appeal is dismissed, and the sentence of death is confirmed. His former confederate, Daulia, has made a statement directly inculpating Tantia in the murder of the village magistrate.

In a very important judgment recently delivered by the Allahabad High Court, the question raised was as to whether the Government of India had not exceeded its legislative powers in passing the Jhansi and Morar Act. It was contended that the India Council Act limits the legislative powers of the Government to making laws for Indian territories only at that time under the dominion of the Crown. The Court held that, if the Council Act stood alone, they would have been forced to decide that the legislation was ultra vires; but, in view of later legislation, it was impossible to conceive that Parliament ever intended to impose the limitation indicated by a literal construction of section 22 of the Council Act. Had the Court arrived at a different conclusion, it might have led to a very embarrassing question in Burmah, as well as in other territories acquired later than 1861.

A very destructive fire took place on Monday at Bombay. The damages are estimated at Rs. 17,00,000. Great complaints were made of the defective water supply, owing to which the fire was allowed to spread without any effectual attempt to get it under.

An association has recently been formed in the Deccan at the instance of Raghunath Rao for the social reform of marriage and other customs. Three hundred members have already joined the association, including the Gaikwar of Baroda and Holkar. Its special and principal objects are to enforce, by penalties, the protection of children from the barbarous cruelty of immature marriage, to raise the legal status of widows, and to put an end to the existing scheme of their degradation and persecution.

BURMA.

Rangoon, Nov. 17.

Information has been received at Rangoon from a trustworthy source that the Mingoon Prince has been interned at Saigon by the French authorities. This relieves the local Government from present anxiety. Popular reverence for the Mingoon Prince, as the legitimate representative of the Alompra family, is still very strong amongst the Burmese, and it is known that he has many adherents in Burma. Had he succeeded in suddenly landing in any part of Burma there would certainly have been insurrectionary disturbances in several districts. The Mingoon's attempt to reach Burma through the Shan States has, however, given the necessary notice to the local Government, who have been able to take all necessary precautions. The names of his principal adherents are well known to the local authorities, who are able to keep them under surveillance.

The members of the Siam Boundary Commission, under the leadership of Mr. Ney Elias, have left Rangoon. They meet at Fort Stedman, proceeding thence to Karennee, where they will meet the Siamese Commissioner, and begin operations opposite Sawlon, the capital of the Red Karens. They will work northward. The Siamese Government proposed that the Commission should meet at Bangkok. This was refused by the Government of India, and the Siamese in their turn rejected the proposal to meet at Rangoon. Besides the escort of sixty military police, the Commission will be accompanied by a reserve escort, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Clerk, of the Oxfordshire Regiment, consisting of 100 Goorkhas, sixty Europeans, and two guns of No. 1 Bengal Mountain Battery, commanded by Captain Triscott, R.A. This force will march parallel with the Commission at short distance, and will be available in case of need.

Preparations for the Chin expedition are being busily pushed on. General Gordon, C.B., commanding in Burma, has proceeded to Pococo to superintend operations. The Tashon tribe of Chins continue apparently loyal in their submission. Some doubt, however, is felt whether the Tashons will allow our troops to enter their territory without resistance. On the 8th inst. the Tashons attacked and destroyed a village belonging to a Bimin tribe, because the Bimins refused to surrender the captives they held. The Tashons have surrendered all their own captives. The Tashon chiefs, however, refuse to visit Fort White. The most influential chiefs have been invited to meet Major Raikes at Scheng, where it is hoped a definite arrangement may be effected. The present hopeful aspect of the affair does much credit to Major Raikes.

With the return of cold weather active operations are being undertaken against the large dacoit bands still remaining in Upper Burma. An expedition leaves Bhamo in a few days, marching south-east, against the Shwesaing Kachyens and the Alompra pretender, the Sawyanine Prince. Afterwards Kaulang, the ex-ruler of the Mohlaing State, will be attacked.

The Bhamo column will consist of 200 Goorkhas and 150 Europeans, and will be met by a force of 150 military police marching from Mandalay. Lieutenant Daly, Resident in the Northern Shan States, with 200 police, will also join from Lashio. Three small flying columns will move against Budayaza and his gang, who are in the mountains between Yemethin and Pyin-Mana. Mr. Macdonnell has arranged that the force shall be accompanied by a body of labourers, who will make roads through this difficult district as the troops advance.

A peremptory warning recently sent by Mr. Macdonnell to the Wuntho Tsawbwa has had a good effect. He is now taking active steps to check dacoit bands in his territory.

The financial prospects of Burma continue favourable. The revenue of Lower Burma for 1889-90 is estimated at 3 crores 20 lakhs, and shows an increase for the first six months at the rate of 20 lakhs over the Budget estimate. In Upper Burma for the same period it is estimated that the revenue will be 88½ lakhs. The actual receipts so far show a surplus over the Budget estimate of nine lakhs on the year. The increase in the Upper Burma revenue is largely due to the recently-opened railway, which shows a surplus of four lakhs over the estimate for the year. The rental of the Ruby Mines commences from the 1st of the present month, and will further swell the revenue, as hitherto the Government have received nothing from this source.

The improvement in the administration of justice continues to engage the attention of the officiating Chief Commissioner. It is understood that before leaving Burma he will place on record an expression of opinion that the time has come for creating an Appellate Court in Upper Burma by appointing a Judicial Commissioner. Under present arrangements Mr. Macdonnell's stay is too brief to enable him fully to carry out this urgently needed reform. Sir C. Crosthwaite, on his return, will doubtless act on the recommendation. The want of such a tribunal is shown by the large measure of clemency extended to prisoners now confined in Upper Burma. If the instructions contained in the recent circular issued by Mr. Macdonnell are carried out by his successor, some 3,000 prisoners will be released during the next twelve months The justice and expediency of this measure are undeniable. The time had arrived for trying it, if Burma is to be governed on the principles always associated with British rule. It really amounts to a wholesale revision of sentences, passed in most cases by young and inexperienced magistrates in Upper Burma, often fresh from the barrack-room, with no requisite training.

It is a subject for regret that the conciliatory and humane policy now being carried out in Upper Burma will not continue under the direction of officials responsible for it and thus be secured a fair trial.

SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST A MAHARAJAH.

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

Very serious charges, some of a revolting character, are being made against the Maharajah of Bhownuggur, a first-class tributary State of Kattywar. The Indian Mirror, a Native paper which is usually active in the defence of the Indian chiefs, joins in the demand for a full inquiry. The Bombay Government is believed to have deputed an officer to investigate the charges. An inquiry was asked for in Sir J. Fergusson's time.

The Maharajah of Bhownuggur has gained credit by free expenditure on public works, education, and hospitals, but it is asserted that these things hide most serious scandals in the administration of the State and the private life of its chief. The Mirror urges that if the charges be proved the Maharajah should be promptly deposed.

One of the most important results likely to follow the Chin-Lushai Expedition is the making of a good military road right through from the Chittagong hills to the Myit-tha Valley, with a view hereafter to establishing land communication between Bengal and Upper Burma. This work is to be taken very thoroughly in hand, and on the Chittagong side Major Leach will have a company of sappers and a regiment of Bombay Pioneers under his orders, in addition to a large number of Native jungle-cutters and road-makers. The alignment of the road is to be carefully made, and the pathway will to be widened ten feet as the troops move forward. Their progress must necessarily be slow, as the working parties will have to be well protected; but the distance to Hoka, where the columns from either side are to meet, is inconsiderable, and there will be no necessity for a rapid advance. The country between Lungleh and Gungaw has never been explored, so the route which the new road will take cannot yet be decided upon; but it is believed that several ranges of hills have to be crossed, a number of rivers bridged, and long detours made through the valleys. The jungle will offer the greatest obstacles to our Engineers, as vegetation in the Lushai forests is of rapid growth, owing to the hot, moist climate; but once a clear cutting has been made, the road should be kept clear from undergrowth without much difficulty. Until the country has been thoroughly pacified, and all the Chiefs brought well under control, this new line of communication with Upper Burma can scarcely be used; but there is no reason why the telegraph should not be laid along it next year. Some 500 or 600 miles would then be saved between Calcutta and Mandalay, and the great pressure upon the lines to Rangoon would be eased at once.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

ARMY ORGANISATION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We are glad to see that the way is being gradually paved for the introduction of the four army corps system in India. From the first of this month some very important changes have been made—notably, the transfer of the Commissariat, Transport and Clothing Departments in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies from the Local Governments to the Government of India. This is evidently the beginning of a scheme for the abolition of the local military secretariats—a measure we have long advocated. The Commander-in-Chief in India and also the local Commander-in-Chiefs have been given certain financial powers, too, which will greatly obviate the transaction of military business. The benefits to result from these changes may not be so apparent in time of peace, but they will undoubtedly contribute to the efficiency of the army in time of war. One of the greatest clogs which the Madras and Bombay armies have had to contend with has been the action of the local secretariats. These authorities are really no authorities at all, and anything of importance must be referred by them to the Supreme Government—thus making the channel of communication for those under them twice as long as it need be. To do away with obstacles like this is a very great reform indeed, and we may well be contented to see the four army corps scheme postponed for a few years, so long as the Local Governments have their connection with the military administration severed. Fortunately Parliamentary aid is not required to bring this very desirable state of things about, and we may expect, so soon as the beginning of next year, to see the local armies, with their chiefs, under the direct administration of the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief in India. When Parliament is called, eventually, to abolish the local Commander-in-Chief, it is to be hoped that the Bill will include the substitution of Lieutenant-Governors for the provinces of Madras and Bombay. When this is done, we may then have some reasonable expectations of seeing a few fiscal reforms of a drastic nature which, without cheese-paring the services down to a state of inefficiency, will admit of lighter taxation for the purpose of ordinary administration.

INTERIOR ECONOMY OF BOMBAY REGIMENTS.

(Times of India.)

We understand that a Board of Officers (Commanding and Staff), presided over by Brigadier-General Anderson, C.B., has been sitting at Poona, during the last few months, to report upon various matters, connected with the "interior economy" of the Bombay Infantry Regiments. The Board have, we believe, completed their duty, and we shall probably know the result of their deliberations hereafter. Meanwhile, the publication of a recent Army Order, referring to the supply of "necessaries" for the men, affords us an opportunity of offering a few remarks. Although of late years much general improvement has been made in this direction, a good deal more remains to be done before the pitch of perfection, or anything like it, is arrived at. Hitherto commanding officers have made their own arrangements for the supply of "necessaries," with the result that prices in every regiment vary, together with the quality of the several articles, notwithstanding the natural desire of each commanding officer to secure excellence, combined with cheapness, for his men. We would strongly advocate (and this, we believe, is also a suggestion of the Board) the introduction of uniformity in all "necessaries" in all regiments, and that they should be supplied at fixed rates, either by Government, or by firms, or individuals, who would enter into a contract with Government. The latter probably would be the best alternative; for now that the office of Superintendent of Army Clothing for this Presidency has been abolished, and amalgamated with that for Madras, Government might not care to undertake the supply. It may be urged that there are objections to oblige any particular commanding officer, who has hitherto supplied his regiment with satisfaction to himself and his men, to conform to a new regulation, which is intended to work for the benefit of the service generally; but it stands to reason that, with the one contract system, greater uniformity and expedition in furnishing supplies would be secured, and "Jack Sepoy" would be certain of having a really good article at a fixed price, no matter with what regiment he might be serving. Reliable and well-known firms, who have already had considerable experience in supplying regiments in various parts of India, would, no doubt come forward to contract.

MINING PROSPECTING IN INDIA.

(Pioneer.)

The widening interest evinced not only at home, but in some degree abroad, and particularly throughout Australia, in the possibilities of India as a country for mining investments, owing to the successful working of the Mysore gold field, the brilliant start of the Burma Ruby Company, and the progressive belief in the future of our oil deposits, naturally bring under discussion the question of training Native students and fitting them for the duties of prospecting. We know enough to be justified in saying that the resources of the Empire are immense, but we must localise, and run them down to definite areas where we can apply the pick and shovel. It is of no practical use to speak of Southern Bengal, the Central Provinces, Burma, Assam and the Punjab as being rich in gold, silver, tin, coal, gems, oil and salt. We want to be advised where a 40-acre block or a frontage claim will offer a fair chance of profit, allowing for the ordinary vicissitudes to which mining is subject. It is the duty of Government to assist us to this end in a more liberal manner than has hitherto been the case. The few officers of the Geological Department who flit from province to another have no time and no means to rise above the stage of possibilities in the reports they submit. They have done excellent work of late under the ruling of their present Director, but they cannot assume Briarean proportions and compass, within a reasonable measure of time, the length and breadth of a land embracing more than one and a-half millions of square miles. Their labours require to be supplemented by scores of free prospectors, and those who have experience of our fellow-subjects can bear testimony to the keen faculty they possess for recognising the more precious ores and rough gems of their native country. They are natural prospectors, in one degree less so only than the Chinese—deft with their hands, keen with their eyes, and measured with their steps. The likelihood of a small reward buoys their exertions; and, with such preparation as could be acquired in a short course of lectures and demonstrations, we should possess an agency for garnering facts that in a few years would bear ample fruit. We possess a splendid museum and a splendid collection of minerals. We have officers with high technical attainments willing to impart their knowledge. Why not, therefore, utilise this machinery to raise a class of men to meet a rapidly coming necessity?

THE LAY OF YE OLD-FASHIONED C. O.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

When first I took the shilling, I was zealous, young, and willing,
And we had not too much drilling in those days;
And I hardly knew the shape or size of foolscap paper,
And was ign'rant of red tape or office ways.

We had no need to cram to pass each new exam,
And we didn't care a damn then for science:
If we had to fight the foe, we relied on dash and go,
And not on some new-fangled appliance.

But "tempora," alas, "mutantur" (that is classical for times are changed) as much as drill is,
And every other thing, but where I find its sting,
Is in "nos et mutamur in illis."

For my temper, I much fear, has grown a little queer,
I haven't got the "suaviter in modo";
And if any one me snubs, why, I vent it on the Subs,
Who regard me as a Military Dodo.

I rise at early morn, and the ruddy streak of dawn
Finds me shivering and forlorn on parade,
To teach the latest knack of performing the attack
That has come out since the last correction made.

But the men are out of hand, for they will not understand
That the very thing we taught them once was right,
They should now be wrong in doin', as 'twould lead to certain ruin
If they ventured to try it in a fight.

I sometimes grimly smile, to think that all the while Jack sepoy may be laughing in his sleeve,
That what to-day we teach him, to-morrow we beseech him
To forget, and some new notion to receive.

Then office tries my patience, with its worries and vexations,
And the ceaseless new creations of returns.
Its income-tax abatements and objectionable statements
And reprimands at which my fury burns.

The Commissariat chap contrives to have a slap
(I think these Transport fellows want a snubbing),
He wishes to know why the charges are so high
For making up our regimental dubbing.

Returns he wishes furnished of the buckles we have burnished,
And the articles we've treated with soft soap,
And commends to our attention some wonderful invention
For picketing a mule without a rope.

The General asks the reason (I hope it isn't treason,
But I'd like to give that D.S.O. my mind),
Why I have not yet reported on the axes, picks, assorted;
Or entrenching tools, or something of that kind.

Well, the reason pretty clear is, we know just how long the year is,
And I really couldn't find the time to do it.
If Government would "plaze" to add a few more days,
No doubt I then might manage to get through it.

Then they keep us so short-handed, I'm regularly stranded
For officers to help me through my work;
There are two Subs on probation, and one at equitation,
Or some examination he can't shirk.

There's one is up at Changla, and another (one a bungler, Who's been plucked in Hindustani twice before),
To complete his education for his next examination
Is engaged in dissipation at Lahore.

With all these things to worry, if my temper's short I'm sorry,
An angel could not well restrain his ire;
But I'm truly glad to mention, that next year I'll get my pension,
And it's then my fixed intention—to retire.

CLEMENCY TOWARDS THE DACOITS.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

We quite agree with the Pioneer that Government should take advantage of Prince Albert Victor's visit to Burma to release some of the dacoits who have been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment during the last few years. Many of these men, of course, are hardened and brutal ruffians, who have already been guilty of the most atrocious cruelty; and such men as these it is necessary to keep under confinement for the full term to which they have been sentenced. But many of the convicts were simple peasants, in some cases little more than boys, who had joined the dacoits partly from fear and partly from ignorance. With all the marvellous stories which were in circulation throughout the whole length and breadth of Burma, of the King's might and of his intention to rouse himself and drive the Kalas into the sea, it is no wonder that simple peasant lads were led astray in 1885 and 1886 into joining the ranks of those pseudo-patriots, the dacoits. The stories of Theebaw's power and even reports of his victories over the British were believed in Lower Burma, where the people had had ample opportunities for seeing something of the power which the Government of India wields. It is no wonder, then, that in Upper Burma the peasantry were in doubt as to which side would be ultimately victorious, that on the first arrival of the British troops they opposed them passively, if not actively, and that through 1886 and 1887 they did not help in the struggle against anarchy, but rather secretly helped the dacoits.

Of course, while the actual struggle against anarchy, and lawlessness was going on, it was necessary to punish severely all those caught red-handed in the act of opposing the pacification of the country, or who resisted the troops or the police. It would never have done then to stop to consider degrees of moral guilt and to draw nice distinctions between those who led and those who were led, cajoled, or threatened into joining the ranks of the rebel-dacoits. The work of repression had to be done first, and severity to all without distinction of persons was the truest kindness. But now that the country is fairly subdued; now that all the strong dacoit bands have been broken up and dispersed, that trade and agriculture have begun to revive, and that the country is better known and partially opened up by railways and roads, there is no need for the same degree of severity. Of course there must be nothing which could be construed into weakness; but the authority of the British Government is now sufficiently established to allow of an act of clemency; and the visit of the Prince, the grandson of the reigning Empress, and the probable Emperor of future years, affords an occasion for such an act of clemency as this.

THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE KALA JAGAH.

(Pioneer.)

["It is currently reported that L—y L—ns—ne has expressed her intention of discountenancing the institution of the Kala Jagah."—Correspondent of Daily Paper.]

Long years ago, measured by the pace at which we travel nowadays, in the time of man's social innocency, in fact, there came into being the Kala Jagah (a popular place of resort among certain sections of the Anglo-Indian community), who decline and fall, together with the reasons thereof, I will endeavour to trace. But, as it has been for many years a time-honoured institution, our inquiry into its origin, its uses, its abuses, its decadence and ultimate fall, must be approached in a spirit of research and reverence.

First, what was a kala jagah? The lamented Ali Baba said some years ago of Lord Lytton's office box: "An office box it is to him, and it is something more—it holds cigarettes." So a kala jagah was a "dark corner" and something more—much more.

Let us trace its rise. There was once a lovesick swain, in days when swains were love-sick, and he ardently desired to find some cool, quiet and secluded spot in which, secure from interruption and from the jibes of a cold, unsympathetic and a mocking world, he could pour into the ears of the one girl who was all-in-all to him those feelings and thoughts with which his young heart overflowed. The boy, without being a philosopher, knew how much surroundings always help. He appreciated his wine out of a good glass; he liked his cutlet well served, and he was thoroughly cognisant of the sweet influence of soft lights, sweet scents, and cosy-cushioned seats upon the senses. He happened to be one of a number of men who were preparing rooms for a ball—so often are apparently small and trivial circumstances allied with and responsible for important results. He espied an ugly and retired corner of the ball-room that threatened to be an eyesore. An inspiration seized him. "This," said he, "is a corner of great possibilities. I will place in it some easy seats, say two; some flowers and leafy shrubs; I will put a lamp, shaded and giving a dim soft light, on that little table in the corner, and an eastern rug on the floor; and I will cut off a too obvious connection with the outer world by some cunningly hung drapery." And he smiled, serenely, happily, the smile of an honest-thoughted boy—remember it was long ago—and a blush came over his clear bright face, for it was in the days when boys did blush, and he said to himself: "Yes, here I will be a man or a mouse, and here will I see what Ethel says"—and he blushed again, did that boy of long ago, to call her Ethel even in his thought.

Well, the ball came off, and he asked Ethel to go and see the quiet little resting-place he had arranged so deftly. And Ethel went. Now the light was so soft, and the flowers so sweet, and the seats looked so comfortable, and the boy asked her so courteously, that Ethel sat down. And they talked and chatted, and the next dance began, and Ethel's partner never came, for he did not know where to look for her, and the boy gained confidence. The wail of a waltz came sighing in through the curtains; and at last the boy said his say. Ethel, who knew perfectly well what was coming, was as surprised as she ought to be, and nearly lost her presence of mind, but not quite; she had just enough left and no more, so I believe, to murmur one little word. She said it very softly with her head turned away; but the boy heard it, and it was all he wanted—and then—well, you must remember the light was dim, and the curtains had been, as I have said, so cunningly draped; well, I repeat, the boy did what you or I would have done in his place. His arm stole round that firm, but pliant, yielding waist; he drew gently, ever so gently, towards him that truly loved form and face; he experienced that sweet intoxication of having near him, quite near him, her to whom his heart was given; he bent his head downwards and met, upturned to his, the face of her whom he loved better than all else on earth, and then—two true hearts sealed their life-compact in one long, sacred kiss. And this was the birth of the kala jagah.

Well, in course of time, Ethel became Mrs. Boy, and—remember, please, that I am writing of long ago—she loved her husband dearly, and was happy and satisfied in her home. Now, she was a good soul, was Ethel, and sympathetic, and she remembered what the kala jagah had done for her, and how it had been the means of bringing her husband to the sticking point. And the years went rolling away, and the Boy, her husband, had lost all his juvenility and had rolled up the list until youngsters called him "Sir," and there were several little Boys and an Ethel or two, and she, the old Ethel, was a burri mem. And as such she assisted at many balls, and her word was law, and she said, "Let there be kala jagahs," and there were kala jagahs. For she always thought of others, did Ethel. And so the place became a recognised institution, a quiet spot sacred to the honest avowals of honest love, and as such it was respected. And this was the use of the kala jagah.

But times changed. Ethel was a grandmother, and the Boy had got his Colonel's allowances, and haunted 14, St. James's-square; but the kala jagah lived on. And every year more and more people "went to the Hills," and then sprang into being the "Hill Captain" and the "Grass Widow"—unsavoury names these, I admit, but for want of better I must use them. They saw the kala jagah, swooped on it, figuratively speaking, and marked it for their own. Its lights were lessened and its draperies increased, and, as a natural consequence, it lost caste. No longer a quiet spot for an honest avowal or a chatty rest, it became the recognised place for the retailing of a slightly doubtful story, or the carrying on of an illicit flirtation. This was the abuse of the kala jagah.

The stories got broader, the flirtations became more and more pronounced year by year, and it was not difficult to see that the kala jagah was doomed. But it died hard. In its fallen state it was even more popular—taking the word in its widest sense—than it had been at its birth. True, the real lover never sought it; but then he was getting scarcer and scarcer, and had almost ceased to be of any account in Anglo-Indian society; but the frivolous used it more and more, and at last the kala jagah became almost improper, even when judged by that elastic standard of social ethics that prevails among the least squeamish of those who dwell some six thousand feet above the sea-level.

There is an old time-worn phrase about doing in Rome as the Romans do, and this was, has been, and, I fear, too often is yet put forward as a sufficient excuse by a well brought up and well mannered-girl for doing in the Himalayas things which, though they may not be absolutely wrong in themselves, yet would never be thought of by her or, if done, tolerated by her people at home. But I must not wander from my subject to give an old fogey's opinion on Anglo-Indian customs and morals in general. Let me keep to my point.

At last came the end. The powers that be ruled, and very rightly, that the kala jagah in its modern development was "bad form"—so it died. There were some, doubtless, who regretted its disappearance, for the worst of us must have some friends, but the respectable and the largest section of society rejoiced in its death.

The career of the kala jagah was like that of too many men: it opened brightly, but it closed darkly. However, de mortuis nil nisi bonum: let us remember it as it was at its best, and strive to forget it as it was in its latter and degenerate days.

SECOND-CLASS BY P. AND O.

"Field Officer" writes to the Pioneer:—

"As the letter below from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the P. and O. Company may probably interest a number of your readers, I trust you will kindly insert it in the Pioneer. Some short time ago I addressed the Chairman on the subject of second-saloon passages, forwarding him, at the same time, all the correspondence that had appeared in the Pioneer regarding these passages. I pointed out that the second-saloons had been vastly improved by the Company at great expense with a view, I presumed, of attracting ladies and gentlemen who could not afford first-class passages but that owing to the want of civility on the part of the stewards, and the supercilious treatment by captains when complaints were made to them of such incivility, a number of people preferred taking passages by cheap non-liners to going by second-class P. and O. It will be observed from the Chairman's reply that the Directors are very determined about first and second-class passengers being alike treated courteously. It now only remains with such of the travelling public as are treated in the de haut en bas style to represent matters to the Board of Directors to ensure the removal of such unworthy servants of the Company."

Dear Sir,—"I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, and to assure you that it has had my best consideration. You are entirely in the right in supposing that it is the intention of the Directors to encourage ladies and gentlemen to travel in the second-saloons of the Company's ships. The Directors have given the most imperative instructions with regard to the manner in which the treatment of such passengers is to be carried out, and have impressed upon every commander and officer in the service the necessity for affording them the same consideration to men and women as is afforded to the passengers occupying the first saloon. I am greatly disappointed, therefore, to receive complaints of cavalier treatment on the part of our officers and stewards, and I can assure you that if any individual instance of this character were brought clearly to my notice the most severe condemnation would be the result; in fact, I may say the dismissal of the person against whom such conduct should be proved from the service of the Company. The difficulty we are in is to deal with vague charges of this kind owing to the natural dislike of gentlemen to bring direct accusations; but it would be rendering the greatest value both to the public and the company if any definite cases of complaint were brought under our notice. The utmost we can do, in the absence of such authentic instances, is to reiterate the instructions which we have already given to our service in abundance, that we desire that all classes of the Company's passengers shall receive equal consideration in their individual spheres, whether they are first or second, or even third-class passengers. I shall take the opportunity (your letter having brought this matter somewhat prominently to my notice) to issue fresh instructions on this point, although on looking over those already given in the circulars of the Company I can only find that this want has already been abundantly supplied. I trust, however, that the reiteration may prove useful, and that the next occasion you travel by our steamers you may be able to communicate a different report to that now before me, and for which I beg to thank you.

(Signed) "W. SUTHERLAND.

"122, Leadenhall-street, London, 2nd Sept., 1889."

"C. G." writes to the Pioneer:—

"I have had some experience of P. and O. travelling, and though I have never travelled second-class, I have not failed to observe. I find that travelling first class is nearly double the expense of second-class. The first class passenger does not pay the larger amount without good reason; the lady will travel first-class and her maid second; they could hardly travel together. Naturally the first-class passengers like to get value for their money; a principal part of that value consists in the associations they have to put up with. Ladies and gentlemen prefer to mix with ladies and gentlemen, and as far as possible to avoid associating with people, however respectable, whose ideas, manners and address may not be quite in accordance with those prevalent in good society.

"A voyage on boardship across the oceans is somewhat different to a run by train from one town to another. Considering how large the proportion of first to second-class passengers is, much the larger and better part of the vessel is rightly set apart for their use and accommodation. Amongst the second-class passengers one sees what is commonly called "a mixed lot"—some few ladies and gentlemen, sergeants, schoolmasters, apothecaries, jockeys, bookmakers and accountants. The tiptop bookmaker prefers himself to travel first-class. One officer travelling second-class found himself cabined with a gas-fitter. If an officer travels second-class what right has he to complain if he and the gas-fitter, who pay the same fare, should be treated on the same terms? The gas-fitter's "kit" consists of one suit of clothes which he wears and a flannel shirt. When the good ship arrives in the Red Sea and the heat becomes excessive he simply drops the flannel shirt and waistcoat and appears in the flimsiest of under-garments. Are the first-class passengers to be forced to crowd together on one side of the hurricane deck, and that perhaps the leeward and hotter side, in order that the second-class may have equally or more airy sites for their beds?

"The fact is that ladies and gentlemen, and more particularly officers, who travel second-class on board a P. and O. vessel place themselves in an intolerable and false position. They cannot walk the quarter-deck, nor can they mix with their equals; they may once in a way be fortunate in escaping disagreeable associations, but they are liable to them; and though their friends in the first-class do their best to alleviate their sorrows, it is quite evident it is impossible for the captain to concede certain privileges and advantages to one set of second-class passengers and deny them to others. The first-class passengers have a right to be protected from the gas-fitter class; and if ladies and gentlemen, from whatever cause, with a knowledge of the advantages and disadvantages, choose to travel second-class, they have only themselves to thank. If the P. and O. Company will guarantee to the second-class passengers the same association, civility and attendance they do to first-class, who will care to pay the far higher fare in order to travel first-class?

"I have met many officers travelling second-class, but I never met one who enjoyed the position: they try and make the best of it for the sake of ecomony; but if, as would appear from Mr. Sutherland's letter to "A Field Officer," the directors are anxious to confer a boon on military officers and other gentlemen, I would suggest to them a reduction of first-class fares on three and a further reduction for two months' tickets during their slack season, say from 15th May to 15th October, during which period "privilege leave" is available to officers. I feel confident numbers would gladly avail themselves of it, and ships now going backwards and forwards nearly empty would find plenty of passengers. The punctuality of the P. and O. would give them the preference in the market, and many officers would go home rather than frivol their time away at fashionable hill stations in India. If ladies and gentlemen wish to travel economically and happily I would recommend them to travel first-class by any other line than second-class by P. and O."

AN ANOMALOUS STAFF OFFICER.

(Pioneer.)

A series of able and suggestive articles on the subject of "Musketry" have from time to time of late appeared in the columns of the Civil and Military Gazette. In these the writer, with much acumen and some pardonable exultation, points out the great strides made of late years in musketry knowledge and the great pleasure taken by all ranks in the subject. For these reasons he very properly considers that regiments should be left more to themselves as regards their musketry education, and demonstrates the utter uselessness of those who are by a misnomer considered to be the exponents and diffusers of knowledge in an art which they know nothing more of than their fellows. Finally he points out the utter unreliability and one-sidedness of all reports made by such "charlatans," and advocates their abolition as Staff Officers.

I hope that I may be permitted to take up my feeble pen in the same cause in the columns of the Pioneer and narrate my own experiences. I am an old and, as I consider, very deserving wing commander. Some little time ago I was superintending the musketry practice of one of my companies on the rifle-range. The shooting not being first-class, and the weather slightly warm, I thought fit to delegate the duties of superintendence to my trusty old Subadar Ram Dass, well knowing that he naturally had more in common with the men than I had, and would probably be able to stimulate them to better performances. I myself retired to a shady tree in the distance, where I occupied myself with my chotihazri and the last copy of the Pink 'Un. In acting thus I would have you observe that, though I was not altogether disregarding my own comfort, I was strictly acting up to the spirit of the Musketry Regulations, which direct us "to endeavour to develop the capabilities of the troop and company officers in every way by interfering as little as possible. Shortly after I had finished my frugal meal, and had comfortably settled myself, down comes that pestilent youngster Bullseye (our Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General for Muketry), full of unnecessary zeal and theory as usual, and as the shooting appears to him exceptionally good he insists on comparing the targets with the registers. Unfortunately it so happened that, as poor old Ram Dass' sight is somewhat impaired, a large number of bull's-eyes and centres had found their way into the registers instead of a corresponding number of ricochets on the targets and misses in the butt. Bullseye forthwith drops on poor old Ram Dass, who, after the manner of his kind, gets ghabrao-ed, and makes things worse by his attempts at explanation. In the meantime hearing high words, I arrive and endeavour to pour oil on the troubled waters by telling the exasperated Bullyseye that "accidents will happen," &c., and that if there has been any mistake I shall be happy to fire the practice again next day, or do anything he may suggest to put things right. In reply Bullyseye informs me that he will be obliged to report my want of interest in muskety and ignorance of the regulatons to the General, and forthwith takes himself off. On talking things over afterwards with my old friend and brother-in-arms, Captain Sentry of the Royal Tipperary Slashers, I find that Bullseye has also reported his company as being deficient in "fire discipline," and his non-commissioned officers incapable of exercising "fire control" as section commanders. The poor old chap is much exercised at this; for, as he has already been twice passed over for his majority, this disparagement is likely to still further damage him.

Now, I ask you, is it right that two old and worthy soldiers like ourselves should have our reputations damaged by frivolous reports on such trivial matters? Is it not monstrous that such uncontrolled and irresponsible Staff Officers should be allowed by General Officers and the regulations to wander about at will seeking whom they may report on, and that their utterances should not even be accepted cum grano salis, but in their malignant entirety?

Quousque tandem, I repeat, are the senior officers of regiments to have, as it were, the sword of Damocles hung over their professional careers, which may be cut short at any time by a stab in the dark in what is so aptly called "an anomalous report?" Can it be wondered at that I am only expressing general opinion when I say that amongst the many plumaged and quaintly-named birds of the Army Staff there is no more "fearful wild-fowl" than the thing called a Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry; and that his utter uselessness and rampant manner of rubbing everyone the wrong way, to say nothing of his crass ignorance, called for his instant extinction?

That he should exist as an exponent of the science of musketry is a standing insult to regimental officers, each of whom, from the Colonel downwards, ought to be, and no doubt is, qualified to supervise this branch of the regimental economy. His raison d'être can, of course, be traced back to the Dark Ages, when the whilom District Inspector of Musketry climbed up trees and scanned the marker's butts with a telescope, or scrutinised, in the hope of espying irregularities without being seen, registers and returns with a magnifying glass to detect erasures therein. But nous avons changé tout cela! Everything can now be left to regimental officers. Every facility is afforded to them of acquiring proficiency in musketry at the schools established for the purpose, and though these have hitherto been conducted gratuitously by the Deputy Assistant Adjutants-General for Musketry in addition to their other duties, there is no reason why this should stand in the way of the disestablishment of such superfluous Staff officers. The curriculum at each school would, no doubt, be just as well carried out by two Army schoolmasters, to whom, as experts in the art of teaching, such work more properly belongs. All that would be necessary to make them thoroughly qualified is that they should have wives for whom a residence in the hills would be desirable, and that they should put themselves through a recruit's course of musketry in order to refresh their knowledge of the "theory of the motion of projectiles," "fire tactics," and other subjects of everyday training.

If it should be contended that to thus abolish such a number of Staff appointments would be an unpopular measure, why not create "Assistant Superintendents of Warlike Stores" in this country as in England, giving them, say, two-thirds of the very large Staff salary now thrown away on Deputy Assistant Adjutants-General for Musketry? The remaining portion might be given to the D.S.O. II., on condition that he kept himself au fait of the figures of merit of regiments and such like important musketry subjects for the information of his General. I am not aware of the precise nature of the duties of the Assistant Superintendent of Warlike Stores, but as they would probably range from the inspection of the big drum to the gauging of a cartridge case, he would probably find no suitable outlet for misdirected energy, and would be unable even to damage the reputation of the sergeant drummer. But whatever way the thing is done, let us have no more Deputy Assistant Adjutants-General for Musketry.

FABULA SED VERA.

THE ANCIENT GUILD OF BHISTIS.

(Pioneer.)

Does anyone know that a fraternity exists in India under vows of brotherly love, secrecy and universal benevolence, savouring much of Freemasonry, quite entitled to the above designation?

It must have been remarked by all who live in India that the bhisti or water-carrier everywhere is distinguished by a coarse red cloth tied round his waist. His capacity, however, is so humble that I do not think many have troubled themselves to ascertain anything about his business or antecedents. After a life-long residence in India the writer, though always much interested in the manners and customs of the people, has only just discovered that this red cloth, besides its utility as a protection against wet, is the sacred insignia of a very large and liberal fraternity inhabiting the whole of India, and willing to accept within what they consider a holy brotherhood all classes of people that will take the vows of their humble guild and credit its traditions.

The subject in this very illiberal and bigoted country, and at the present time when the insociability of the different classes of the inhabitants is on the tapis, is one that should be of special interest, as illustrating the possibility of combination in India without regard to creed, and particularly to Freemasons, who, I believe, have already traced a craft in some respects similar to their own existing in Afghanistan.

The burden of a very old English song is—

"And I hope that his soul in heaven may dwell,
The first who found out the leather bottell," and I suspect that the use of skin and leather bags as receptacles for liquids may be traced to the most primitive times with all people. I remark this, as it leads me to believe that the mussuk or leather bag of the bhisti was known in India, as leather bags for irrigation and huge raw hide bottles for keeping ghi certainly were, long before the advent of the Mahomedans, and that the guild has a Hindu and far more ancient origin than the rather prejudiced brotherhood of the present day, chiefly Mahomedans, assigns to it.

The bhisti of the present day says that he is a follower of the great Khwaja Khidir, a prophet now in heaven placed in special charge over all the waters of the earth, and that his apron is the archetype of the red cloth now worn round the loins by bhistis generally. Who this gentleman was historically I leave to those to discover who have more leisure than myself. It may be useful to note that there is a place in Calcutta called Kidderpore. Certain it is that the investiture of the longi or apron is a ceremony carried out in the presence of a meeting of the brotherhood and after the aspirant has been tutored by a guru or preceptor in the mystic observances and identifying questions and answers of the craft and has taken vows. One of these vows I know to be never to refuse a drink of water to any soul that asks for it, never to demand payment but to beg it if in need, and not to press if refused; never to refuse a drink to the thirsty, even if giving it results in inconvenience to yourself, as for example when going a distance with a full waterbag, for opening it and giving out only a small portion of the contents would have the effect of making the water shake, which is unpleasant to the carrier. Another vow is always to help a brother of the apron when in distress, assist his family should he die, and start his boys in life with the implements of the profession.

When a member of the fraternity meets a person he does not know with a longi round his waist and carrying water he proceeds to put him certain questions, the answers to which are known only to the initiated, and are secrets never yet divulged to others. Some of these questions are:—How many mouths has a well? How many mouths has a mussuk? How many straps in a mussuk get wet and how many remain dry? and the like. If the man displays ignorance he is reported to the brotherhood as one carrying on the profession out of the pale of the fraternity, and is promptly obliged to select a preceptor and get properly instructed and initiated. Caste and creed have nothing to do with the matter. Hindu bhistis who wear the longi sit in panchayat with Mahomedans, and, as far as I can see, there is nothing to prevent Christians joining the brotherhood.

A master-bhisti is recognised by his proficiency in leather-work and leather decoration. One is spoken of as being able to make leather hookah bottoms of such strength that they recover their shape after a heavily-laden cart has gone over them.

Bhistis never hesitate to take service in any part of India, and you rarely meet an old bhisti who has not travelled, and who does not, when applying for a place, talk of having gone with Mr. Thompson to Assam, and with someone else to Peshawar, and to a dozen other opposite points of India. The reason is that they know they will find, like Freemasons, a protecting brotherhood everywhere. They are less liable, I understand, than any other Native camp-follower to shirk the battle-field; and their neutrality, evinced in the moral obligation to give drink to friend or foe being recognised by all, secures them an immunity from hostile interference that would not, I am afraid, be accorded to a Sister of Mercy. The quickness and ease with which bhistis organise a strike must have been often remarked, particularly in hill stations.

With regard to the strap and hook worn over the shoulder by the bhisti for suspending the bucket while filling his bag and the leather belt worn over the apron, I believe their adoption is not enforced by the brotherhood; but as the alternative in the absence of the hook is to suspend the bucket by holding the rope with the teeth, Hindus, who are very particular about contamination, refuse to drink water from those who do not wear it. I have not had an opportunity of analysing the cause of objection by Hindus in the Punjab to drink from bhistis who do not wear a leather belt over their aprons.

A bhisti who, by some extraordinary good fortune, sat on the throne of Delhi for a few days is said to have issued a leather currency: a leather disc with a gold pin riveted in the centre, worth about Rs. 2-8. I have never seen a specimen myself, but have heard of the existence of the coin; and if my memory does not deceive me, Thomas says something about it in his Chronicles of the Pathan Kings. The motto of every true bhisti should be "There is nothing like leather." I feel sure that similar associations will be found to exist in many other Indian trades and professions.

MR. JUSTICE STRAIGHT takes privilege leave in spring, and completes his service for pension in December of next year.

THE Englishman says:—"Mr. Justice Mitter, the senior Judge of the Calcutta High Court, retires on the 12th of February, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Ameer Ali will be appointed to the vacancy. Mr. Ameer Ali's special claims are widely recognised, and the Bengal Mahomedans have some cause to complain of the manner in which the Native judgeships have been invariably given to Hindoos in recent years.

THE Calcutta University will hold its first examination in drawing in connection with the Entrance Examinations of 1890.

THE Vernacular paper, Praja Bandhu, published at Chandernagore, has been interdicted from entering India for printing scurrilous and seditious articles, and the managing proprietor, Mr. Tinkourie Banerjee, an assistant of the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, has been dismissed the service.

FROM a social point of view the opening of the new year in Calcutta promises to be unusually brilliant. Several extraordinary A.D.C.'s will be temporarily appointed on the Viceroy's Staff when Prince Albert Victor and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught are guests of the Viceroy.

THE work of removing Loudon's Buildings is now in full swing. Messrs. Atkinson Brothers have undertaken the dismantling of the buildings under a contract. Nearly the whole of the south block has already been pulled down, and the men are now at work on the roof of the old Revenue and Agricultural Office, adjoining the Government Press in Hastings-street. The Home Department records still occupy a portion of the old Home Office, and on their removal the work will be extended to that part of the block. The old woodwork is being sold three times a week by public auction on the spot, and the bricks and mortar are taken over by the contractors. By the time the Government of India returns to Calcutta the old offices will be in great part removed. Already they present the appearance of having undergone a siege.

MADRAS.

LORD CONNEMARA, accompanied by Lord Marsham, A.D.C., Mr. Rees, Private Secretary, and Captain Fowle, A.D.C., returned to Madras on Sunday morning, the 27th Oct.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR'S Annual Reception and State Ball will probably take place during the visit of Prince Albert Victor to Madras, in the third week in November. The Ball to his Royal Highness, which the Madras Club proposed to give during his stay at Guindy Park in December, has had to be abandoned, as no spare day was available for it. Madras society will, however, probably be entertained by the Governor at a ball at Guindy Park to meet his Royal Highness on his return from Travancore.

IT is understood that the Hon. Mr. J. H. Spring Branson, the Advocate-General of Madras, goes home on a year's furlough in March next to take a well-earned rest. His confirmation in that office has given great satisfaction, for he is very popular among the members of the Bar, and is held in high esteem by the Bench.

MR. CLOGSTOUN, of the Financial Department, late Accountant-General, Madras, has returned to Madras, and the Gazette announces his appointment as Fourth Member of the Board of Revenue. Sir Richard Barlow is, by over nine years, senior to Mr. Clogstoun. He intended to retire next spring, but was ambitious to do so as Member of the Board of Revenue. He has now resigned service from the 15th of November.

MRS. ELLEN MAY ROSS, daughter of the late Sir George Kellner, has filed a suit in the Madras High Court against her husband, Henry Thomas Ross, Madras Civil Service, claiming judicial separation on the ground of alleged cruelty at Calicut and Madura, subsequent to the trial of the Morgan-Ross case. The Advocate-General is retained for Mrs. Ross and Mr. Wedderburn for Mr. Ross.

UPON the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, Mr. S. Sullen, the Presidency Postmaster, who will shortly be 55 years of age, has been permitted to remain in the service for another period of five years.

MR. F. B. HANNA, the agent and manager of the Madras Railway Company, will take a year's furlough in December, and Mr. H. R. P. Carter, the chief engineer, will in all probability officiate as agent during Mr. Hanna's absence.

MR. DAVID SINCLAIR, M.A., the principal of the Free Church of Scotland College, Madras, retires in January next, after having served in India for upwards of twenty years. He sails for Scotland about the 20th January with Mrs. Sinclair. Mr. C. A. Paterson, the vice-principal of the institution, will probably take Mr. Sinclair's place at the head of the college.

BOMBAY.

(Nov. 1.)

MR. F. ROBERTS, son of Sir Frederick Roberts, Commander-in-Chief of India, accompanied by his tutor, Mr. Rogers, left Bombay for Europe by Friday's mail steamer.

THE officers and men—between 500 and 600 in number—of the Turkish man-of-war Ertougrol, now lying in the harbour, were on Friday brought ashore, and marched through the town to the Juma Musjid, where they attended the ordinary Friday morning service.

ON Friday morning H.H. the Prince Koomar Shri Bhaosingjee, grandson of the Rana of Porebunder, accompanied by Mr. F. B. O'Shea and suite, left by the P. and O. Company's steamer Kaisar-i-Hind on a tour to Australia and the Southern Colonies generally.

CAPTAIN TATE, 15th B.C., has been appointed Inspector of Transport for the Rajputana States, and Captain Masters, of the Central India Horse, Inspector of Cavalry of the Central India States in connection with the scheme for utilising the offers of the Native Princes in defence of the North-West Frontier.

AS recommended by the Municipal Commissioner, the Standing Committee of the Municipal Corporation on Wednesday accepted the tender of Mr. Venku Balu for the construction of the entire superstructure of the new municipal office buildings. It was stated that the work to be executed under the contract would cost about Rs. 937,703.

AT the annual general meeting of the Millowners' Association, held on Tuesday, under the presidency of Sir D. M. Petit, the committee's report and accounts were unanimously adopted. On the motion of Mr. George Cotton, seconded by Mr. M. N. Banajee, a resolution was passed by the meeting to do away with the present system of paying the chairman and members of the committee Rs. 15 and Rs. 10, respectively, for attending each meeting of the committee.

DR. A. F. FERGUSON, of the Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital, and Professor of Pathology at the Grant Medical College, has been suffering from a serious attack of blood-poisoning, the result of an inoculation accidentally received while performing a post mortem examination at the J. J. Hospital. This is the second time within a few months that Dr. Ferguson's pathological zeal has resulted in a serious illness. He is now in a fair way towards recovery.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

(Oct. 28.)

SEVERAL influential householders at Simla have forwarded a protest to the Local Government against the manner in which the house-tax is levied by the Municipality of the summer capital. It is urged for the Protestants that the present system of levying taxes upon an assessed annual value, which is frequently greatly in excess of the rent actually obtained, is unfair, and amounts to a tax upon income which does not exist.

THE annual distribution of prizes to the 2nd Punjab Volunteer Rifles took place in the Town Hall, Simla, on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 23rd. Eighty members of the corps paraded, and the band was in attendance. Sir Charles Elliott had consented to present the prizes, and among those present were Lady and Miss Elliott, Major-General Collen and Colonel Pemberton. The chief prizes were very handsome trophies, varying in value from Rs. 200 to Rs. 100. At the conclusion of the distribution Major Freeman, acting Commandant, briefly thanked Sir Charles Elliott on behalf of the corps for the honour he had done the Volunteers in giving away the prizes. Captain Wright, Secretary of the Prize Committee, then called for three cheers for Sir Charles and Lady Elliott, which were lustily given. Three cheers were then given for Major Freeman, and the proceedings terminated with "God Save the Queen," played by the band.

AN accident occurred between Murree and Sunny Bank on the morning of Oct. 21, at nine o'clock. Colonel and Mrs. Money and their family were proceeding by tonga to Rawalpindi, when, about a hundred yards past St. Thomas's College, the horses shied, and together with the tonga and its occupants fell thirty to forty feet down the khud. The nurse, who was sitting behind, managed to jump out with an infant, but Mrs. Money was very much hurt; her leg is broken, and it is feared her head is much injured. Colonel Money and the rest of the children were only slightly hurt.

A NEW bank was to be established in Lahore on Nov. 1, under the management of Mr. D. P. Masson, the capital, Rs. 5,00,000, having been already subscribed. A large new house on the Mall, now being completed, has been secured as the head office, and branches will be established within the next few months at one or two stations where banking facilities are not at present available.

THE Secretary of State for India has decided not to remove Captain Kreyer, of the Bombay Staff Corps, from the Service, and he is to return to duty after being severely admonished. It will be remembered that Captain Kreyer was the adjutant of the 17th Bombay Infantry when certain defalcations were discovered in the regimental funds last year, which led to the trial and imprisonment of the commanding officer, Colonel Bulkley. It was thought at first that Captain (then Lieutenant) Kreyer was equally guilty with Colonel Bulkley in the matter of misappropriation of the funds of the regiment, but subsequent events which transpired at the trial of Colonel Bulkley went to show that this was not the case.

INDIAN LEPERS—A NEW DANGER.

THE "leprosy scare," which, owing to the Prince of Wales's speech, created such a sensation in London, has for the nonce died away here, in the presence of other more dangerous troubles; but the subject of how best to deal with lepers in India has been attracting public and private attention there for a long time. The question has been taken up by the Government, and will be legislated upon during the ensuing winter sessions of the Legislative Council at Calcutta. It is possible that leper asylums will be founded under the order of local Governments, and some general principle of segregation be adopted. Opinions, however, are not unanimous as to the best way of meeting and counteracting the spread of the evil, but it may be taken for granted that every humane and possible effort will be made towards this desirable end. And it may also be taken for granted that the Government and the local authorities will be supported in their good endeavour by the general body of the respectable Native community. But, unfortunately, a danger is threatened which, if allowed to go, may mar everything, and that is the danger of Christian proselytising being associated with the new movement. The Rev. W. Carlile, founder of the Church Army in England, has recently addressed a letter to a Bombay paper, in which he says, regarding the proposed segregation of lepers:—"We have had several applications from trained nurses who are desirous of ministering to them spiritually and physically, and we shall be glad to hear from you when there is any opening for such workers. Our mission nurses, who work under the direction of the Church Army, give themselves to this twofold work, and some of them, we believe, would be able to take the superintendence of female leper wards." The sincerity of the offer is not to be doubted for a moment. The zeal and devotion of which Father Damien gave so noble an example to the world are not dead, nor will the world willingly let them die. Terrible and loathsome as the disease of leprosy is, and dangerous as contact with its victims may be, there are not wanting, and there never will be wanting, brave men and women who will confront danger and death in carrying out the duties of a faith, part of whose command is to tend the suffering and the sick. The spirit of Christianity has, ever since its Founder gave his creed to the world, been strong enough to support those who have devoted themselves to the work of aiding afflicted humanity in their noble efforts—whether the trial was made in times of pestilence, famine, or cruel war. So, in the present instance, it may be accepted as a fact that the offer of aiding the lepers of India has been made in the most pure and unselfish spirit of the Christian creed. But it is an offer which the Government of India must hesitate to accept. That Government is bound by the most sacred of pledges not to interfere with the religious beliefs of any of the peoples of divers faiths over whom it rules. If leper asylums be established in India they must be established as public institutions under official control; and, as pointed out by an Indian contemporary, if once the idea obtained that the Government were countenancing missionary efforts at conversion the relatives and friends of the lepers would do all in their power to make the law inoperative, and segregation on a large scale would become impossible. The difficulties which already beset the question of how best to deal with the lepers would be considerably enhanced if the Rev. Mr. Carlile's well-meaning proposal were seriously entertained. It may not appear in this light to him, or to the amiable ladies who tender through him their generous and self-denying offer; but all unprejudiced persons who have Indian experience must see the wisdom—nay, the necessity—of Government absolutely discountenancing the same. We thoroughly agree with what the Allahabad paper says about medical missionaries:—

"We have the highest respect for the medical missionaries, who are a great power in many parts of India, but we certainly think they would be out of place as superintendents of leper asylums unless they absolutely refrained from all attempts at active proselytising. Their self-sacrifice and purity of life would unquestionably have some direct effect upon the miserable creatures to whom they would devote themselves: but beyond giving a noble example of what Christianity is capable of, they should content themselves with ministering to the physical needs of their patients. Already there is a difference of opinion among the Native community regarding the desirability of segregating lepers, and the opposition to the sanitary principle is likely to be emphasised if missionaries are to become superintendents of the proposed asylums. The great success which has been achieved by the Countess of Dufferin's Association for supplying medical aid to the women of India is mainly due to the scrupulous respect shown to the religious prejudices of the people."

This is the sensible way of looking at the matter. It need not be feared that any attempt at proselytising would engender now a mutinous spirit in India as in the days of the greased cartridges, but it would simply paralyse the action of the Government and defeat the very object which all parties have in view, viz., the successful combating with the terrible plague of leprosy in India.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN GORDON, 6th Bengal Cavalry, is to be attached to Prince Albert Victor's party as Camp Quartermaster.

MR. GREENWAY, of the 8th Kings, has been appointed extra Aide-de-Camp to Sir Steuart Bayley.

THE following changes are said to be about to take effect in the Medical Department of the Punjab:—Surgeon G. F. Nicholson, acting Civil Surgeon of Delhi, on the return of Surgeon-Major T. E. L. Bate, succeeds Surgeon-Major John O'Neill as Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, Punjab. Surgeon Dr. O'Neill to Karnal as Civil Surgeon. Surgeon S. Little, who has been acting at Umballa, proceeds to Chanawan, Gujranwala, where he remains until February next, afterwards proceeding to take up the Civil Surgeoncy of Dalhousie permanently.

IT has been decided that mess dress will be required in the case of officers attending the Muridki Camp, so baggage must be increased accordingly.

THE question of a change in the full dress of the Bengal Cavalry has not been finally decided, but it is unlikely, as we said some time back, that any radical change will be made

THE whole of the sixty probationers for the Staff Corps from English regiments at home will this year be posted to the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, where subalterns for the Native regiments are much required.

AN Army circular has been framed notifying the transfer of the Military Works under Madras, Bombay, and local administrations to the Military Works Department, with Colonel Sanford as head of the whole Department in India.

THE business of distributing Burma Medals to those entitled to them is making satisfactory progress. Up to the 30th September 28,322 medals (17,200 silver, and 11,122 bronze) had been issued, the total claims received up to that date having been in number 29,253 (17,592 for silver and 11,661 for bronze medals).

THERE is no likelihood of any immediate change being made in the conditions of service of the Bengal silladar cavalry, but certain proposals have been made by the military authorities to the Government of India with a view to lessening the charges which fall upon the men. The fullest consideration will have to be given to these before any orders can be issued, particularly as the financial aspect of the subject has come prominently to the front.

THE parade which Brigadier-General Luck, Inspector-General of Cavalry, held at Secunderabad on the eve of the termination of his last visit cost the State the loss of nine horses, worth collectively Rs. 7,000. "Eight," the Deccan Times was told, "died from congestion of the lungs, and one broke its back. Besides this the horse hospitals are full of cripples. Dashing cavalry movements are no doubt good in their way, and in the field on actual service an occasional sacrifice of both men and animals may be necessary to secure an advantage; but we fail to see the use of this kind of thing in the time of peace."

An exaggerated report as to insubordination in 4th Pioneer Regiment has appeared in a Madras paper. A few of the men were insubordinate and refused to enter the railway carriages on the occasion of 200 men being transferred from Trichinopoly to the Peryar Irrigation works. Eight men are to be tried by court-martial.

The Commander-in-Chief of Madras will probably make a tour through Burma this cold weather to inspect the garrison there, and may visit the Chin country and remain with the Brigadier-General Symons' force for a short time.

ARRIVAL OF H.M.'S TROOPSHIP SERAPIS.

H.M.S. Serapis, Commander F. B. Boardman, C.B., arrived in Bombay Harbour on Tuesday morning, October 29, from Portsmouth. The vessel called at Malta, Port Said, and Aden on her way, and brought 71 officers, 19 ladies, 8 children, 1,154 European rank and file, 64 women, and 71 children. The weather experienced on the voyage was very pleasant, with the exception of the heat, which was excessive in the Red Sea. During the voyage two infants died from convulsions. There were three cases of scarlet fever among children, on account of which they were landed at Aden, with their parents, three men and two women. The Serapis passed the troopship Crocodile homeward bound. The following is the list of officers and their families:—

Royal Horse Artillery.—Major E. Blaksley; Captains C. E. Moberley, R. M. Crofton; Lieuts. J. E. W. Headlem, St. J. L. H. du Plat Taylor, J. Haggard, E. P. Smith, and Mrs. H. B. Dodgson.

Royal Artillery.—Lieut.-Colonel and Mrs. C. H. Kilner, Lieut.-Colonel H. M. Burgess and two daughters, Major and Mrs. H. A. Rigg, Major and Mrs. J. W. T. Spencer; Captains H. B. Brownlow, J. M. Stopford; Lieuts. S. J. A. Muter, Lieut. and Mrs. F. A. Campbell, O. K. Tancock, E. J. Cleeve, C. J. Blunt; Second-Lieuts. N. F. Gordon, R. E. A. Le Mottie, F. T. Oldham; Rev. Mr. and Mrs. J. Thorne.

C. Battery, Royal Horse Artillery.—Major W. G. Knox, C.B.; Captain and Lady G. Thomas, Bart.; Lieuts. T. G. Best, H. L. A. Jenkinson, F. H. F. R. McMeckan.

Eastern Division, Royal Artillery.—Second-Lieuts. W. H. Hunt, and C. W. G. Orr.

2nd Devonshire.—Major and Mrs. R. E. Kersol, Lieuts. W. B. Landes, P. J. L. Good.

1st East Surrey.—Captain W. H. Ellis, Second-Lieut. W. H. Dickson.

2nd Derbyshire.—Quartermaster W. Fox.

Indian Medical Staff.—Surgeons F. R. Ozzard, W. S. P. Ricketts, Surgeon and Mrs. E. Jennings, A. E. Hendly, G. W. Jenney, C. T. Hudson.

Royal Engineers.—Second-Lieuts. H. R. Stockley, C. H. W. Crookshank, S. G. Rivett-Carnac, J. F. H. Carmichael, W. A. S. Kincaird, J. S. Liddell, G. B. Kingstone, H. F. Thuillier.

B. Battery, Royal Horse Artillery.—Captain F. L. Cunliffe; Lieuts. G. MacMicking, A. D. Young, W. A. Robinson.

Royal Horse Artillery.—Major Hon. F. W. J. Shore; Lieut. L. G. F. Gordon; Second Lieut. C. F. Templer.

Southern Division, Royal Artillery.—Captain R. W. Fuller; Second Lieut. W. C. R. Tannar.

1st East Lancashire.—Captain and Mrs. A. J. A. Wright and child.

2nd Royal Irish.—Second Lieut. J. S. M. Shea, H. W. Cruddas.

Medical Staff.—Surgeon-Major and Mrs. W. D. Willson, and five children; Surgeon and Mrs. W. Keays, Surgeon and Mrs. J. C. Culling, W. P. Feltham.

5th Lancers.—Captain A. C. King.

1st Bradford.—Second Lieut. R. M. C. Stevens.

2nd West Bedford Riding.—Second Lieut. W. Beale.

1st Connaught Rangers.—Second Lieut. F. T. T. Moore; Roman Catholic Chaplain, Rev. Thomas Mahon.

Wife of Captain A. Eardley Wilmot.

A Rangoon paper says that one of two recently escaped prisoners at the Mandalay Jail presented himself voluntarily at the prison doors a few days after regaining his liberty, and stated that he felt he had done wrong, and thought to make amends by giving himself up. Such an instance of conscientiousness on the part of an escaped prisoner has never happened, it is believed, in Lower Burma jails. Perhaps the difficulty of getting work where he was unknown may have influenced the man to voluntarily surrender his liberty after regaining it. The other runaway is still at large.

BRITISH CREDIT IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—We must be careful to preserve our credit among our Native subjects, and especially among the soldiers of our Native Army. Credit is a plant of a delicate growth, and a rude shock to it may destroy it for ever.

Hitherto our savings banks have been a great success, but if we neglect indispensable checks on fraud, and allow those who trust us with their money to be ruined through our negligence, we shall bring British Administration into contempt, and force our Native soldiers to hide their savings in the walls of their houses or in their fields rather than take them to our Treasuries.

Please to cast a glance on page 1063 of your Paper of the 11th inst. Is it worth the while of the Empress of India to plead a legal quibble, and by so doing evade restoring to one of her brave soldiers the money which he has entrusted to her care? Why are the Post Office clerks not punished for neglecting to take the trouble to distinguish between a signature in Hindui and a Goormookhi one? Ought not some effort to be made to discover the thief who has obtained the soldier's money?

Why did the Postmaster pay to a suspicious character without referring to the Officer Commanding the Regiment?

Ten or twelve pounds' sterling may be a small sum for the Imperial Exchequer to lose, but it means ruin to the family of a soldier.—Your obedient servant,

T.

A TAKE OF WOE.

A party of thirty-nine Persian Zoroastrians have arrived in Bombay from Persia after undergoing unusual privations and hardships; and the Kaiser-i-Hind publishes, on their behalf, a tale of woe, the incidents of which might well be woven into a romance of thrilling interest. The party consists of men, women, and children, and took forty-two days to arrive here from their native country. On the morning of the tenth day they had gone two stages from Shirjan, when they met a party of Moguls going from Bombay to their homes in Persia, and were informed by them that a band of armed robbers was in their rear, and they were warned to clear out of the place as fast as they could. The warning was at once availed of very thankfully; and the Zoroastrian party sped away from the locality. The same evening, however, as they approached the bottom of a hill, they encountered a band of thirteen masked robbers who were armed to the teeth. The first demand the robber made was that the Zoroastrian travellers should throw away their sticks and clubs. In the presence of armed men, they were obliged to submit to this demand. The men were then put into groups of five, and were bound together by their arms. They and their women and children, who were riding on hired camels, were then taken by circuitous ways into a jungle, where they were deprived of everything valuable. They had with them goods for presentation to their friends and relations, silk goods, and other articles of the aggregate value of about Rs. 1,600, with which the robbers loaded one of the camels, and then three of the masked marauders cleared out of the jungle with the loaded camel. Some of the plundered party, especially the women, had cash with them, which, watching a favourable opportunity, they buried in the ground. They were then taken further on to a more cool and secluded spot, where they were divested of all their valuable clothing and everything of value they had upon their persons. With these another camel was loaded. The robbers made use of the most violent threats to the women, and demanded that they should give up anything they had concealed, or else the men would be killed before their eyes. Having satisfied themselves that nothing more remained to plunder, the robbers released the arms of the men and made them sit down in a ring. One of them, named Vafadar, who had been divested of all his silk goods, asked for the return of cloth sufficient to cover himself. This request the robbers construed into a defiance of their authority, and they passed a sentence of death upon Vafadar for his contumacious conduct. A consultation was held regarding the manner of his death; and four of the robbers took him to some distance from the rest. At this moment, there was a sudden change in the aspect of affairs; and a dispute arose among the robbers as to the share of each in the plunder. It preserved Vafadar from death. The unfortunate travellers, who were sitting in a ring, were told to keep their eyes fixed upon the ground, any one who ventured to look up being threatened with instant death.

Whilst they were thus sitting with lowered heads, the robbers threw among them a quantity of gram-flour, and disappeared in the nearest bushes. With great trouble the travellers traced their way back from the jungle towards the main road. They dug up the cash which some of them had succeeded in burying underground. After two days' privation, hungry and thirsty, they went back to Shirjan. They lodged a complaint before the Governor of Shirjan, who distinctly told them that he could do nothing in the matter, that the place where they were robbed was not within his jurisdiction, and that they should go and complain to the Governor of Yezd. They found shelter in the houses of three Zoroastrian piecegoods dealers of Shirjan, one of whom wrote a narrative of the hardships and distress they had undergone, and addressed it to Mr. Ardasir Meherban of Yezd. Having remained four days in Shirjan without getting any redress, the disappointed travellers started for Bunder Abbas. They had not money enough to pay for their passages by steamer from Bunda Abbas to Bombay, but a benevolent Persian merchant supplied them with means to procure them passages. Thus deprived of all their worldly possessions, broken down in spirit, and having undergone much distress, they have arrived in Bombay, their only consolation being that not a single member of the party had lost his or her life. This tale of woe should furnish food for serious reflection to those who sometimes forget the blessings of security of life and property they enjoy under the just and benign British Government, or those who delude themselves with the belief that anything approaching such blessings can be obtained in the dominions of the Shah of Persia notwithstanding the civilizing influences which His Majesty's frequent visits to Europe may be supposed to work in improving his policy or his modes of government.

THE MAIL DAY DECISION.

The Pioneer learns that it has been finally settled that there is to be a Saturday departure of the English mails from Bombay all the year round. They will be closed at such an hour as to permit of a half holiday being kept, and there will be no interference with the observance of the Sabbath. The only condition on the part of the Peninsular and Oriental Company in connection with the new arrangement is that they shall not be fined for the late arrival of mails in London. This can only occur when the fortnightly Australian steamer is late. Calcutta will benefit greatly by a Saturday departure, as the English mails will be delivered on Wednesday morning in time for letters to be answered the same evening. This will do away with the necessity for a special train from Calcutta to Bombay

—o—

MAJOR WILLIAM DICKSON, late Royal (Bengal) Artillery, who served in the Punjab, died on the 30th ult., at Edinburgh, in his sixty-fifth year.

SURGEON-MAJOR JAMES ATKINSON WEST SPENCE, late Madras Medical Establishment, died on the 5th inst., at 35, Woburn-place, London.

MAJOR-GENERAL EDWARD DAVIDSON, late Royal (Bengal) Engineers, died on the 1st inst., at his residence, Tudor House, Wandsworth, aged sixty-two years.

COLONEL JOSEPH OUSELEY, whose death was lately announced, was one of the oldest officers of the Bengal Army and a learned Oriental scholar. Soon after arriving in Calcutta he was, in 1821, attached to the College of Fort William, and in 1824 he became assistant professor of the Sanscrit, Mahratta, and Bengali languages. In the following year he succeeded Dr. Lumsden as professor of Arabic and Persian. From 1833 to 1838 he was secretary to the college, and in the latter year he was nominated Superintendent of the Mysore Princes, an appointment which he resigned in 1844, on returning to England to join the East India College as professor of Arabic and Persian. In 1862 he was appointed one of the examiners in Oriental languages for the Civil Service Commissioners, and he held that position till 1883, having been engaged for upwards of sixty years in teaching Eastern languages.

THE precise nature, says the Pioneer, of the connection between Mr. Bradlaugh and the Congress has never been exactly explained; but he leaves no doubt about his ardour in "the cause." He has already drafted a Bill for the reform of the Legislative Councils in India, and several of the phrases in the memorandum with which he commends his essay to the attention of the public suggest a faith that would remove much greater mountains than even the Congress raises in the path of the student of Indian politics. "Should the Congress approve the system, I shall, of course, draft the Bill accordingly," is one of several sentences suggesting an implicit trust which must be extremely gratifying to Mr. Hume and Mr. Eardley Norton, but which, to those who know how far the Congress really represents the Indian people, is apt to raise the question whether Mr. Bradlaugh's criticism of the existing administration is likely to be either impartial or sagacious.

ADOPTED AS A PRIZE BOOK BY THE SCHOOL BOARD.

In Six Volumes. Each Volume complete in itself. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each volume, or £1 1s. the set,

The Parents' Cabinet of Amusement and Instruction.

BY

MARTHA HILL and FRIENDS.

NEW EDITION.

EDITED BY

CONSTANCE HILL.

The School Board Chronicle says:—"It is a library of bright, lively, wholesome reading in short pieces—about twenty separate tales, fables, poems, articles, and sketches to the volume. Now that the work has been so handsomely and happily revised, no school library will be quite what it should be without it."

The Guardian says:—"We hope that the children of the present generation will welcome, as we remember doing, 'The Parents' Cabinet.' So much did we love the book that the sight is a real refreshment."

The Englishwoman's Review says:—"The work will be prized, we believe, by a new circle of readers for its own sake, as well as by those who re-read it to recall the impressions of their childhood."

The Scotsman says:—"All the articles are written in popular language, being well brought within the capacity of those for whom the work has been compiled. . . . Will prove one of the most popular productions of the season for the rising generation."

The Daily News says:—"Each book is complete in itself, in token of which the order is indicated, not by figures, but by stars. . . . Mrs. Hill was the inventor of this convenient method. . . . May be separated without assuming the appearance of odd volumes."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him ! ! I know him not ! ! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him ; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge ! !"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset ! ! ! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety; but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death ?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham !—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Real Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying —"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 8st Nov.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 6th Nov.; and from Calcutta to the 6th Nov.

The Viceroy paid a visit to Ali Masjid and Landi Kotal on Oct. 30th. After receiving various tribal jirgahs his Excellency returned to Peshawar the same evening. A review of 6,000 troops in garrison was held the next day, and then his Excellency visited the Edwardes' Mission Schools, where he heard some Afghan boys recite passages from Shakespeare. On Nov. 5th Lord and Lady Lansdowne completed their voyage by boat down the Indus, and reached Til Kafir Kot.

The course of the Lieut.-Governor's winter programme has been arrested for the moment in consequence of a change in Prince Albert Victor's dates. What these dates will finally be is still unknown in the North-West Provinces. The tour in Bundlekhand, in January, has been abandoned.

Sir Steuart Bayley, on his return from Darjeeling, was to reach Calcutta on the morning of the 18th inst.

The additional members of the Legislative Council who will shortly vacate their seats unless reappointed are Mr. Robert Steel and Sir Dinsha Manekji Petit, whose terms of office expire on December 9th and 21st respectively.

General Richard Strachey may visit India during the present cold season as Chairman of the East India Railway Company, to take stock of the various interests committed to his charge in connection with it.

Sir E. Buck arrived at Srinagar on the 20th ult. As arranged beforehand, conferences were held in the Residency on the 21st and 22nd ult. to consider the horticultural question in Kashmir.

Colonel Ardagh, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, has been temporarily disabled by a kick from a horse, received when riding through the Khyber. He remains at Peshawar for the present.

Mr. G. E. A. Ross has returned to Allahabad and taken over charge of the office of Public Prosecutor from Mr. Charles Dillon.

Lieutenant Froom, R.A., died in Bombay on Nov. 1st from typhoid fever.

A small number of Tibetans have ventured into Garwhal, as was the case last year. They have established themselves just within the border in a small and rudely fortified post, and have begun the collection of custom-dues from such travellers as use the Niti Pass. A detachment of the 3rd Gurkhas has been ordered to expel them and destroy the post.

The number of deaths due to the railway accident at Hathras on the night of the 27th ult. has amounted to eighteen. Twenty-four women and children are still lying in hospital. A magisterial inquiry into the occurrence was held on the 29th, and another by the Consulting Engineer to the Government on the following day.

The inquiry into the cause of the death of Lieut. Farquharson, who was killed on the East India Railway in September last, is to be reopened. The Deputy Inspector-General of Railway Police has asked that the depositions of Lieut. Borradaile, who was travelling in the same train with the deceased officer, may be taken with a view to obtaining further information regarding the accident.

The names of twelve mamlatdars connected with the Crawford case who are not to be removed from the service appear in the Gazette of India of Nov. 2nd. Each case has been considered on its merits by the Government of India in communication with the Bombay authorities.

The Bombay Fine Arts Society have determined to hold an art and industrial exhibition next March. The dates will be so fixed as to enable Prince Albert Victor to be present at the opening ceremony before leaving for England.

The number of men belonging to Native States, who are now in training to take the field, should the necessity arise, number between 12,000 and 13,000 cavalry and infantry.

They are chiefly in the Punjab and Rajpoot States and Cashmere, but the Punjab State troops and those of Ulwar are most advanced.

The movement is progressing satisfactorily in other places.

The Government have relaxed the close border system, and intimated that officers will be allowed on exploring expeditions across the frontier from time to time.

The Hon. Mr. Quinton has arrived at Shillong, and taken over charge of the office of Chief Commissioner of Assam from the Hon. Mr. Westland.

The traveller Mr. Dauvergne has successfully completed his journey to North-West Kashmir.

The consecration of the Rev. E. Noel Hodges as Bishop of Travancore and Cochin has been postponed.

Captain Moberley, R.A., who was charged before a court-martial at Colaba with misappropriating Rs. 7,000, has confessed to several of the charges. The Court's sentence is not yet known.

The Bombay Millowners' Association have set aside their resolution to close their mills for eight days each month, owing to a revival of the cotton trade in China and Japan.

Several Native members of the Bar in the Punjab have received copies of Dhuleep Singh's manifesto from Calcutta and Rawalpindi. One Native barrister has sent his copy, together with a letter to the Private Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor, while others have sent theirs to the Deputy Commissioner.

Major J. H. Newill, of the Bhopul Political Agency, has been posted as Political Officer to Sardar Ayub Khan at Rawal Pindi. The post had been vacant since Captain Evans-Gordon's departure on furlough in January last.

It is said that Colonel Mallock's successor as head of the Telegraph Department will be a Colonel of the Royal Engineers from England.

Mr. W. C. Bennett, of the North-West Provinces, is likely to officiate for Sir Edward Buck when he takes leave in Spring.

Of the money recently stolen from the Viceregel Lodge, Simla, the sum of Rs. 600 has been recovered by the Simla Police, who have also got one man in custody.

A large number of transport coolies for the Lushai Expedition, with elephants and Commissariat stores, under charge of Lieut. Twining, Scottish Rifles, leaves Calcutta on Tuesday for Chittagong.

A proposal has been made to establish a Pasteur Exhibition in Madras.

NOTES.

THE news wired from India continues to tell of the hearty welcome which Prince Albert Victor is receiving everywhere in his tour up-country. After being magnificently entertained at Mysore his Royal Highness has gone elephant hunting, and all sorts of sporting and shooting expeditions are being arranged for him in places where game, big and small, abound. He will possibly better enjoy these attentions than those of Station Committees organising balls and dinners in his honour.

THE Viceroy is still on tour, and although he met with two unpleasant accidents—having received a kick from his horse and twisted his foot in mounting—he has gone on with his work of frontier inspection without cessation or delay. The wild men of the borders have met him with demonstrations of delight; he found only loyalty and progressing civilisation in the Khelat State and the districts adjoining, where a few short years ago an Englishman would have been more likely murdered than welcomed; and last, but not least, he heard at a mission school on the North-West Frontier Afghan boys reciting passages from Shakespeare! Russian papers please copy.

THE Queen has been graciously pleased to approve of the appointment of Lord Harris to be Governor of Bombay on the expiration of Lord Reay's term of office. In announcing the nomination of Lord Harris attention has been drawn to the appropriateness of his receiving an appointment in India, where his family has so distinguished itself. The first Lord Harris, great grandfather of the present peer, gained his peerage as commander-in-chief at the siege and capture of Seringapatam in 1799, when he successfully reduced the power of Tippoo Sultan, and in accomplishing the object of the expedition sent by the Marquis Wellesley, made a very important addition to our possessions in the East Indies. Lord Harris had fought in previous campaigns against Tippoo Sultan when on the staff of Sir William Medows, an almost forgotten officer, who in his day rendered very valuable services in India. The second Lord Harris was under his father at the siege of Seringapatam, and was in the storming party on May 4th, 1799, which carried that fortress, when he was specially complimented for gallantry, and sent home with the captured standards, which he presented to King George III. He was afterwards in Nelson's action of Copenhagen in 1801, and finally commanded the 2nd Battalion 73rd in Holland (when he carried the village of Merxem by storm), and at Quatre Bras and Waterloo. His son, father of the present peer, was a well-remembered and popular governor of Madras at the time of the Indian Mutiny, and in sending the fourth Lord Harris we have consequently an unbroken succession of four generations with Anglo-Indian connection.

THE rumoured nomination of Sir George Greaves to the Bombay command in succession to the Duke of Connaught has occasioned various comments amongst our military contemporaries. One writes:—"If Lord Cross does not see his way to insist on the appointment of a purely Indian officer, General Greaves's selection must be admitted to be a good one. There may be some who object to Sir George's occasional brusqueness of manner and capacity for self-assertion, but there must be few so thick-headed as to doubt his ability. His career has been an exceptionally lucky one, but he has left his mark wherever he has been, and he is a good instance of Lord Wolseley's ability to pick his men. Few, meeting Sir George casually, would realise that he has just forty years' service, twenty-eight of which, by the way, have been spent on the Staff. Eight clear years of his time were put in at the Horse Guards, and he might have had another five had he chosen. When his term as Adjutant-General in India expired he was offered the post of Deputy Adjutant-General at the Horse Guards, but he had become weary of Pall-mall and enamoured of India by this time, and declined an appointment which would have given him, in the circumstances, a position and influence second only to that of Lord Wolseley himself."

ANOTHER writer puts in a claim on behalf of Indian officers to the coveted command:—"Of Sir George Greaves's qualifications we speak elsewhere, and probably matters have now gone too far, but we cannot help thinking that before the appointment is definitely approved by the India Office it would be well to consider the claims of purely Indian officers to the Bombay command. Whatever names may be submitted to Lord Cross, Indian officers look to him to protect their interests. One name only need now be mentioned, that of Lieutenant-General Stanley Edwardes, C.B., whose long and varied services on the Staff have qualified him for any command. Besides, his deprivation of the command of the Northern Division at Desa last year, by its absorption, accentuates his claim for consideration. Bombay and Madras are the only appointments open to lieutenant-generals of the Indian Army. A British officer now commands at Madras, and why (now that the Indian commands are being equalised between British and Indian officers) should not Bombay go to an Indian officer? Lieutenant-General Stanley Edwardes is in the prime of life, and his undoubted claims are entitled to the fullest consideration by Lord Cross before he confirms the appointment of a British officer.

THE Sikh community at Gujranwala have replied to Dhulip Singh's recent manifesto to the people of India. The reply is dated Sept. 20th last, and is now published in the vernacular in pamphlet form for circulation to the whole of the Khalsa Dharm, and particularly the Sikhs of Gujranwala, with whom Dhulip Singh, by birth, claims to have special connection. They have written to him to say that, after having compared his and his ancestors' rule with the present rule of the British Government, they are compelled to view his letter with the utmost disgust, hatred and contempt. They have also told him that they are true to the British, and that they would fight against him and his colleagues. In conclusion, they advise him to relinquish all his mad thoughts and ideas and return to London and ask for forgiveness, and add that if he does not choose to do this he ought not to disgrace the Sikh community by sending them letters full of nonsense.

THE turf in India is not improving as a moral institution, judging from the following from an Anglo-Indian contemporary:—"The trade in Australian ponies has seemingly become a thriving one, assuming that the supply is an indication of the demand. The Calcutta Turf Club measured no less than thirty-six ponies last month, thirty-four of these being newly-landed Australians, the other two country-breds. Yet it was only two years ago that the Calcutta Stewards steadily set their faces against pony-racing, and not a single provision for this class found place in the Calcutta prospectus. The change that has come over the scene would hardly be credited by Calcutta racing men of the last generation, and, perhaps, as little relished. We have exchanged bigger horses, if fewer, and fewer owners, who raced for the racing's sake, for small ones and many owners, racing mostly for the gambling's sake."

A "BENGALI," writing in the current issue of the Indian Church Quarterly Review, observes that, whatever may be his faults, the Native Christian is fond of his religion, and that religion has a strong hold at least on his habits. By way of illustration he then recalls a scene in which "a Native Christian young man almost senseless with drink" made an attempt to sit at dinner "after saying grace." The inference drawn is that "reality could not be so utterly absent where habits were so deeply grounded." This is a profound philosophical reflection which may contain a germ or two of truth in it, but what will the missionaries say to it?

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

Calcutta, Nov. 24.

The Viceroy's frontier tour during the last ten days has been fully occupied with military experiments and political receptions. Lord Lansdowne reached Quetta on the 16th inst. An address of welcome was read at the railway station, which expressed unbounded loyalty and gratitude for the many benefits conferred by the British Government in the shape of railway communication, waterworks, schools, and hospitals. The Viceroy replied in fitting terms. In the evening he held a levee, and the following morning left for a visit to the Khojah Pass. He inspected the tunnel, where some 40 English miners were at work. Only 600 feet remain to be excavated. The Viceroy went over the hill by a rope incline, thence rode out to Chaman, where he inspected the fort and station buildings, and then proceeded to Shelabagh, on the Quetta side of the Khojak.

He returned to Quetta the next morning and went to Baleli, ten miles from Quetta, which has a most elaborate system of defensive fortifications, guarding the only two passes by which it is believed an invading army could possibly enter India in this quarter. The Viceroy witnessed an attack on the forts by the Quetta garrison. The attack was delivered with ball ammunition, the forts being defended by dummy troops. The object of the attack was to test, as in real warfare, the impregnability of the forts. The result was most satisfactory, as, though subjected to very fierce and sustained artillery fire, the forts remained for all practical purposes completely uninjured. The Viceroy then returned to Quetta, where he attended a State ball given by the residents. Next morning he held a grand durbar, which was attended by the Jam of Lus Beyla, the Khan of Khelat, and innumerable other chiefs and frontier notables of lesser dignity.

This is the first Viceregal Durbar ever held in Quetta, and for that, among other reasons, it was clothed with special interest and political importance. In the course of a very long address the Viceroy said :—

"More than twelve years have passed since the memorable Durbar held by Lord Lytton at Jacobabad, which resulted in a treaty of reconciliation between the ruler of Lus Beyla and the Belooch Sirdars. Important consequences followed, the Bolan Pass became a peaceable highway, and advanced prosperity was universally experienced. The political advantages were also marked. The loyalty of the Khelat State was effectively proved during the second Afghan war, when effective assistance was rendered throughout to the British officers during the continuance of the operations. Scarcely ten years have elapsed since the districts of Pishin, Sibi, and Thal Chotiali became British possessions, and more recently the Kakar country and Khetrai valleys have become subject to our administration. The advantages have been reciprocal—loyal service on one side, and on the other settled protective government."

At the conclusion of the Durbar the Afghan refugees were presented. In the evening the Viceroy witnessed a display of fireworks and some Beloochi sports, the most interesting feature of which was a mock camel raid. Fifty wild horsemen, armed to the teeth, rushed into the camp at full gallop and surrounded and drove off a herd of camels, whereupon the owners in their turn made a spirited attack upon the raiders on the village and recovered the camels. A Beloochi dance followed, some fifty men circling round hand in hand with ever-increasing velocity. This was followed by a grand wrestling match. Next morning Lord Lansdowne left to inspect the Bolan Pass. He arrived at Lahore on Saturday, and held a levee in the evening.

Prince Albert Victor's tour, though of less political importance, has probably occupied a large share of the public interest and attention, in consequence of the enthusiastic character of the personal welcome everywhere accorded him. After his magnificent reception and entertainment at Hyderabad the Prince left for Madras. When bidding goodbye to the young Nizam the Prince, whilst thanking him for his generous hospitality, expressed the hope that they might meet under a different sky. His Royal Highness, accompanied by Sir E. Bradford, Captain Harvey, and Captain Holford, arrived at Madras on the 19th inst. He was received at the railway station by the Governor, the Commander-in-Chief, the members of Council, and a municipal deputation. In reply to the municipal address, Prince Albert Victor said ever since landing he had been greeted with enthusiastic kindness and goodwill, to which he had no personal claim, but which afforded him all the more delight as he realised that the reception given him symbolised their loyalty and devotion to the Queen. It had always been his dearest ambition to visit this vast and interesting country. In the fruition of this desire he felt assured that his expectations would be more than realised, and that the tour would afford him a life-long interest in the country, its people, and its institutions, which could never have been acquired other than by a personal visit. In the afternoon Lord Connemara drove the Prince in a victoria through the principal streets, which were gaily decorated and spanned by innumerable triumphal arches. Garlands of flowers were presented to his Royal Highness en route. He visited the principal hospital, attended a State reception in the evening, and later on witnessed a grand display of fireworks. Next day he went out snipe shooting and attended a State banquet in the evening, at which sixty guests were present. On the following day the Prince received and returned official visits, went over the museum, played a polo match, and attended a State ball in the evening, at which some 300 guests were present. The ball was a brilliant success. On Friday his Royal Highness left by special train for Bangalore.

The Lieutenant-Governor has returned to Calcutta after an extensive tour in Sikkim. He crossed the Singbha, 12,130 ft. high, thence descended into the Hillait valley, crossed the great Runjeet river, proceeded through the Testa valley to Tumlong, where he met the Sikkim Rajah, thence proceeded to Guntok and Paklyong, and reached Jalpaiguri on the 16th inst. The party were everywhere well and hospitably received.

The Nilghiri mountain railway has been sanctioned as far as Coonoor. The construction of a railway from Bangalore to Nunjungad with an eventual extension to Gundlupat and the coffee districts, will be begun immediately.

The Hyderabad executive has been reconstructed. Two secretaryships have been abolished, and the departments of Justice, Police, and Jails have been transferred to the control of the Home Secretary. The Judicial Secretary has been appointed Chief Justice.

The Gidhour case, in which Mr. Coxhead, a magistrate, was recently severely censured by the High Court, has ended in the complete breakdown of the prosecution. This was the case in which a European was dragged through a large civil station in handcuffs, though merely charged with a bailable offence. Very considerable indignation has been expressed at this abuse of criminal process. It is to be hoped that the Government will support the High Court's censure by executive action.

The religious riots between Mahomedans and Hindoos have left considerable soreness and unrest. A Hindoo magistrate was recently assaulted by a Mahomedan magistrate at Rohtak, and each community purposes petitioning the Government to remove the magistrate of the rival religion. The intensified jealousy existing between Hindoos and Mahomedans renders it very difficult for the Government to adopt an attitude of strict impartiality without affording some ground of offence.

Mr. Hume, general secretary and chief supporter of the Native Congress movement, has addressed a letter of complaint to the standing committee. He states that he has been forced personally to pay Rs. 10,000 towards last year's expenses of the Congress, though the Bombay commitee pledged itself to raise £100 to be remitted to London to Mr. Digby. On the strength of this undertaking he authorised the expenditure, but the committee now refuse to ratify their pledge. The Congress might be held for ever in India, but would prove fruitless unless an active accredited agency were maintained in England to din into the heads of the English public the wrongs and grievances of the Natives. If they cannot so combine as to raise yearly and promptly, without being constantly dunned for every rupee, the paltry sum of Rs. 30,000 or Rs. 40,000 required for an English agency, then this means that their opponents who declared them unfit for self-government were right, and the sooner he abandons the vain attempt of making ropes out of sand the better.

This wail of bitter complaint affords an interesting commentary upon the forthcoming Congress, which meets at Bombay during Christmas week. Very few, even among the advanced school of English-speaking students and lawyers, accept the movement seriously, hence Mr. Hume's great anxiety to create a reacting enthusiasm by paid agitation in England. But, as the Natives fail to experience any real benefit, they naturally refuse to contribute to subsidise a costly home agency to promote needless and valueless agitation.

BURMA.

Rangoon, Nov. 23.

The arrangements are already well advanced for giving Prince Albert Victor a brilliant and loyal reception in Rangoon. Beautiful and elaborate arches, which will display the loyalty and the decorative skill of the principal communities in Rangoon, are being erected along the route by which the Prince will drive. The programme includes a visit to the

Digitized by Google

Great Pagoda, where the Prince will be received by a body of Buddhist clergy and elders, national sports on the Royal lakes, and an illumination of Dalhousie Park, which the Prince will witness from a Royal barge of Burmese design and workmanship.

The Chin expeditionary force is concentrated, under Brigadier Symons, at Pacoco, where General Gordon also is. Both men and animals are in a very satisfactory condition. The advance begins to-day, and by Dec. 14 the whole force will rendezvous at Kan. Large sheds will be built at the various halting-places to shelter the troops, and an ample supply of forage stored. The late heavy rains have made the roads very bad.

Rice prospects are favourable. The paddy crop in Lower Burma promises to exceed the average, but in several districts of Upper Burma the outturn will be poor.

"INDIA IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS."

Sir R. TEMPLE, M.P., at a meeting of the East India Association, held at the Westminster Town Hall on Monday afternoon, delivered an address on "India in the House of Commons." The House of Commons, Sir R. Temple reminded his hearers, was essentially a party place. The Liberal Party identified itself especially in matters of change, progress, reform, and improvement; the Conservative Party having its share in these beneficent movements, though identifying itself more closely with matters of frontier defence and Imperial policy. Since the last Franchise Act there had been a great change in the constitution of Parliament, and he might say that India would not be lost on the plan of the present House of Commons, whatever might happen after the next General Election. Sir Henry James's Act, affecting the expenses of elections, had been followed by very remarkable changes in the electorate, and had enabled many meritorious men who had served their country in the East to become members of the House. The democracy had show far more discretion than might have been expected in the selection of candidates. They wisely preferred men who had a history and who had served their country in circumstances of trial and of danger. The effect of this had been to secure to Parliament a considerable number of hard-headed, strong-handed, and experienced men, who, while helping forward all beneficial legislation, would see that nothing rash was permitted to be passed, or even to be seriously considered. The introduction of railways into India had brought about another great change, seeing that it enabled members with political experience at home to gain experience in the East. A man doing the grand tour of India in three months came back with better capacity of appreciating what he read or heard from men who had served in that country. The system of putting questions to Ministers in the House elicited valuable information, although, since the invention of obstruction, it was well-nigh impossible for a private member to secure the passage of any measure affecting India or any other part of the Empire. He deprecated any inquiry of the extent proposed by Lord R. Churchill, and ranging over the entire surface and history of so vast an empire. Parliament had given to India a Constitution, and was very unwilling to detract from the authority of its administrators. He trusted that the present House of Commons, which certainly had very Imperial tendencies, would be unwilling to interfere with the executive action of the Viceroy or of his subordinates. The tendency to make use of Indian grievances for party purposes he regarded as dangerous. Nothing more detrimental to the Empire or to reform could be imagined than the tendency of many of these Indian friends to try and use the party differences in the House of Commons for the purpose of promoting their particular ends. Indian subjects should not be allowed to fall into the hands of purely party men—(hear, hear). It was a libel on the House of Commons to say that members had neglected the interests of India during the past Session, seeing that that Empire had received more attention than all the other Colonies. There was frequent complaint of the lateness of the introduction of the Indian Budget. He doubted, however, whether the first state of that measure would be better than the last. The three great item of Indian revenue—the salt, the excise, and the opium taxes—had been brought under notice. To those who regarded with anxiety any increase of the salt tax, it might be a consolation to know that this was the only tax paid by the peasant. The House had passed a resolution with regard to the Excise dues, and had unwisely, he maintained, repealed the Contagious Diseases Act. He denied that the Government of India was directly concerned in the cultivation of opium, or stood in any other position than that of a revenue agent. The depreciation of the rupee had also engaged attention in a great measure, because the manufacturers of Lancashire had felt the competition of cheap money, and of the greater advantages of service possessed by cotton manufacturers at Bombay and Madras. It might be expected, therefore, that Lancashire would endeavour to insist upon the extension to India of the same industrial laws that prevailed in this country. The unearthing of the Stock Exchange scandal with regard to the Deccan was deserving of the highest praise. No authority other than the House of Commons could have effected this exposure, since it concerned not merely the Government of India, but the Council at Whitehall and the Stock Exchange. Those, however, who had misbehaved themselves, had acted in such a way that very little had been done to them—(hear, hear). Some of the best debates in Parliament had related to railway policy in India. There was no desire to change the frontiers; but there was a strong wish to complete the railways to the frontiers, and to maintain those frontiers against all enemies—(hear, hear). With reference to the Congress of India and the Council at Whitehall, he might say that there seemed to be a general disposition among members to grant to India to some extent what might be called representative institutions. That the members of the Legislative Council who were now appointed should be elected appeared to be a moderate proposal, and if that was what the Congress desired, he would advise them to express their opinions in quiet and moderate terms, for he could not help thinking that some of the language used at certain meetings and in certain publications was little short of seditious. In conclusion, he assured the audience that they could rely upon the present House of Commons doing what was best for India.

General MACDONALD moved a vote of thanks to Sir R. Temple.

Mr. C. K. DESAI was proceeding to discuss the policy of the Government with regard to India, and to accuse it of collusion in the matter of the Burma Ruby Mines Concession, when he was ruled out of order.

Mr. M. WOOD seconded the vote of thanks, and it was cordially agreed to.

THE OPERATIONS IN UPPER BURMA.

The correspondence and despatches relating to the late operations in Upper Burma from Major-General Collen, Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department; Major-General Ellis, Adjutant-General in India; and Major-General Sir George White, late commanding the Upper Burma force, which have been published in the official Gazette, are interesting, but their length prevents us from re-producing them in these columns. Sir George White, in a despatch dated Simla, July 6th, makes some remarks on the general aspect of affairs in Upper Burma. The progress towards law and order seemed most remarkable to those who knew the stages through which the province had passed. The dacoity and anarchy which had been revealed in the province were not the after-growth of British occupation, but were the results of years of weak yet cruel government nominally by the King whom we displaced, but actually exercised by the corrupt officials of his Court. Some of the strongest Ministers were known to be patrons of the dacoits, from whose ill-gotten gains they did not scruple to swell their incomes. The dacoits on their part were glad to pay something to secure immunity from punishment in the rare cases in which they were brought up. The people, left to themselves, fell back upon local government, and the villagers grouped themselves together under the leadership of the strongest dacoit chief they could attract to their service. Socially the dacoit leader was a hero, not an outcast, and the sympathy of the people was largely with him. Dacoity was thus an institution of the country, and in dealing with the vast system the British force, in order to introduce the elements of civilised government, had to protect the weak in spite of themselves against the strong. A map of Upper Burma attached to this despatch shows the principal territories taken within our administration in 1887 and 1888. Besides these territories other small districts had been added to our later responsibilities, increasing the area to over 50,000 square miles. After describing the operations of last season, the measures taken against dacoity, the railway works, and referring to the national tendency of the Burmans to take up arms in season, and out of season—a tendency that made a general disarmament of the people necessary, Sir George White states with regard to the future that there was still much to be done before the tribes of wild Chins on the western frontier of Upper Burma could be subdued. They were savages, and must be thoroughly dominated. He had the high authority of the Marquis of Dufferin for saying that one of the pleasantest features of the earliest years of our administration of Upper Burma had been the happy relations which had existed between the civil and military officers employed on the great work of the pacification of that province. Sir George White concludes his despatch as follows:—"I cannot close this paper without expressing the regret with which I have observed the systematic misrepresentation which nearly every act of the local administration has undergone at the hands of a section of the public Press." In another despatch Sir George White submits the names of a number of general and other officers "who rendered specially valuable service to the State" during the last year of his command in Upper Burma.

GOLD MINING IN BENGAL.

"Investor" writes to the Calcutta Englishman:—

"My attention, and that of others, was recently attracted by an article in your columns referring to the gold-fields in Chota Nagpur, inspected and reported on by Mr. P. Bosworth Smith, F.G.S., A.R.S.M., late mineralogist to the Government of Madras. There can be no question of the existence of the precious metal in the locality referred to in your article under notice. I speak from personal knowledge, and my views are supported by many well qualified to judge. The material question is how to get gold, that is, to work it so as to make mining a paying concern. The Mint's assays appended to Mr. Bosworth Smith's report show that this can be effected under proper management and skill.

"Under these circumstances might I ask what retards the issuing of the long-expected prospectus, and why an undertaking associated with many good names should be held in abeyance, and thus create suspicion and doubt in the minds of the Indian public? In making this inquiry I know that as an answer it will be alleged that the scheme is independent of local capital—the money needed being already subscribed in England and the Continent.

"But as one interested in the scheme, and intimately connected therewith by the right of holding preferential syndicate shares, I must protest against the dissemination of such a statement, which is contrary to the principle on which my investment was made in the concern, viz.—that it would be owned and worked in India, and exclusively Indian in its control and management."

THE NORTHBROOK CLUB.

The Home News publishes the following letter from Sir George Birdwood, C.B., C.I.E.:—

SIR,—I shall be obliged by the publication in your columns of the following extract from a letter addressed by me to Sir Seymour FitzGerald, in answer to a letter from him of yesterday's date, the purport of which will be gathered from my reply:—

"Although the veil of anonymity assumed by the writer, in the Home News of the 1st inst., of the letter signed 'Amicorum Inops,' is of the frankest transparency, at least to the eyes of habitués, like myself, of the Northbrook Indian Club, yet as he has deliberately adopted it, and for obvious reasons of controversial convenience, you will, I trust, excuse my not assisting in the disclosure of his personal identity; and as I am no longer, since the 1st of September last, a member of the Club, I may, I hope, be allowed to resist your paternal inquisition on the point, to this extremely fine extent, without the imputation against me of rebel disobedience.

"But, inasmuch as you describe the letter as inaccurate and malicious, I will at once state that, while in way responsible for its appearance, I unreservedly endorse it and approve its publication. This goes, indeed, without saying for everyone who has followed the internal history of the Club during recent months. For, indeed, years past I have said to you all that is said by 'Amicorum Inops' as to the muddled mismanagement—i.e., the 'dual control' and the consequent desperate condition of the Club—but it has all been in vain; and I can only rejoice, therefore, that it has now all been set forth publicly in the Home News; for it has indeed come at length to this pass with the Northbrook Indian Club—that it must be 'mended or ended.'

"I most sincerely regret that anything should have been advanced in the letter capable of being characterised as 'malicious.' I feel sure no member, present or past, of the Club harbours the slightest ill-will toward you, while personally no one is more popular, or more justly so, with all its members; and as I read the letter of 'Amicorum Inops,' its intention is simply and solely to exasperate the Northbrook Indian Society—that is, you—and the committee of the Northbrook Indian Club—which is only you again—into an effective course of reformatory activity. You are all—all of you—dead asleep over your duty to the Club, and 'Amicorum Inops,' has whiffed a pinch of black pepper across your noses, just, haply, to wake you up to a saving sense of your responsibilites to the Club. His letter is written, in short, more in policy than in malice, and the only malice in it, I hope, is the etymological root of the sinister word in the Sanskrit word, malum, for 'black pepper.'

"I am also sorry to find you determined not to be roused into action by the letter. I would not have any of the office-bearers of the Club rushing into print to discuss its condition and the details of proposals for its reconstruction. But the Committee of the Northbrook Indian Society should at once be convened for the earnest consideration of the means to be taken for the rehabilitation of the Club. Anyhow, I, on my part, am resolved it shall not perish without doing all in my power to recover it from its present state of inanity and languishment, and to restore it permanently to something of the vitality and prosperity it showed under the energetic administration of Mr. R. D. Sethna, LL.D. Whether our Society should be amalgamated with Miss Manning's, or not, by some means or other the Northbrook Indian Club must be maintained, and in ever-increasing efficiency, as the social rallying centre for all classes of Indian gentlemen resident in the United Kingdom; and I, at least, think that there is much to be said in favour of the plan, put forward by 'Amicorum Inops,' for insulating the Northbrook Indian Club from all official relationships, and placing it under the general supervision of the National Indian Association. The road to our salvation seems certainly to be taking this direction—object, as some of us may at first, to have to pursue it. But the old story is ever being repeated in the experience of all really useful men:

'via prima salutis,
Quod minime reris Graiá pandetur ab urbe.'"

I have only to add the expression of my hope that Sir Seymour FitzGerald will, now that it has been given before the world of Anglo-Indians, lay my advice to heart. I have worked hard and most profitably for the Northbrook Indian Club, and certainly no one is more earnestly interested in its welfare, not even 'Amicorum Inops,' with whom, in all that he has written, I am altogether at one; and I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

GEORGE BIRDWOOD.

Acton, Nov. 9, 1889.

AN INDIAN LUNCH AT THE NATIONAL LIBERAL CLUB.

The lunch to be given by Mr. George Yule, at the National Liberal Club on December 6th, to Sir William Wedderburn, Bart., the President-elect of the Indian National Congress, promises to be an event of some political importance. Among those who have accepted invitations are Sir Wilfred Lawson, M.P., Mr. Justin McCarthy, M.P., Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Mr. Jacob Bright, M.P., Mr. A. C. Morton, M.P., Captain Verney, M.P., Mr. E. T. Gourley, Mr. R. T. Reid, Q.C., M.P., Mr. J. R. Buchanan, M.P., Dr. G. B. Clark, M.P., Mr. W. S. B. McLaren, M.P., Mr. A. C. Morton, M.P., Sir J. B. Phear, formerly Judge of the Bengal High Court; Sir W. W. Hunter, the well-known writer on Indian topics; Sir George Birdwood, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., Mr. Justice Birdwood, of Bombay; Sir W. Markby, D.C.L., the Reader of Indian Law at Oxford; Mr. Frederic Harrison, Dr. Spence Watson, Mr. Albert Spicer, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, Lord Salisbury's "black man"; Mr. J. Dacosta, and others. Sir William Wedderburn leaves the same day for Bombay, joining at Brindisi the steamer in which Mr. Bradlaugh is going out to India. Mr. Yule, it may be remembered, was the President of the Congress held last December in the capital of the North-West provinces. He is a merchant of London and Calcutta. In the interests of British rule in the East perhaps it would be as well if there were many more Anglo-Indians of the same stamp. We hear that one of the wealthy Natives of Bombay, the son of the late Hon. Morarjee Goenldass, has telegraphed to England offering to place his mansion on Camballa Hill at Mr. Bradlaugh's disposal during his stay in Bombay. The junior member for Northampton will evidently be made a great deal of by his Native admirers in the Western Presidency. It will be interesting to see how he will be received by the English community. Some of their newspapers wanted the Viceroy to deport Mr. Caine when he was carrying on his out-still campaign last winter. Will they pay Mr. Bradlaugh a similar compliment?—St. James's Gazette.

A REUTER'S TELEGRAM, dated Bombay, Nov. 22, says:—Piece goods, quiet; 7lb. shirtings, 3r. 6a.; 8¼lb. shirtings, 3r 15a.; cotton quiet. New good Dhollerah, 204r. Shipments of the week, 2,000 bales. Exchange on London, four months' Bank bills 1s. 5d.

A REUTER'S TELEGRAM, dated Calcutta, Nov. 22, says: Piece goods quiet; 7 lb. shirtings, 3r. 5a.; 8¼ lb., 4r. 6a.; 40s. Bannermill twist, 4a. 11p.; jute, good native, 1st mark. 33r. 8a.; Government Securities Four per Cent., 98 9-16; Four-and-a-Half per Cent., 102¼; saltpetre, 6r. 14a.; linseed, 5r.; rapeseed, 4r. 13a.; rice Ballam, 4r. 14a.; Exchange on London, 4 months' Bank bills, 1s. 5d.; freights, 20s. to 50s.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE BOMBAY ARMY ROMANCE.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The military question to be brought before Parliament, according to the Manchester Guardian, refers, we believe, to the case of Lieutenant Frazer. This young officer was gazetted a probationer for the Bombay Staff Corps from a regiment of British Infantry at the beginning of the year and posted to the 3rd Bombay Cavalry. Early last month his name again appeared in General Orders, when he was transferred to the 2nd Bombay Lancers, and in an "unusual manner" was directed to be attached for duty to the 28th Bombay Native Infantry. Both the 3rd Bombay Cavalry and the 28th Native Infantry are stationed in Poona, so the young officer had merely to move from the native cavalry quarters to the native infantry lines. The extraordinary nature of the transfer was much commented upon at the time, and no doubt Mr. Frazer's friends at home are moving the matter. It should, however, be explained that at the time of the transfer the 28th Bombay Native Infantry were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to join the Chin expedition. Ultimately a regiment from Madras was selected, and the 28th Native Infantry were directed to stand fast, but Mr. Frazer remained on with the Regiment, and perhaps is still with them. It is not clear what share the 2nd Bombay Lancers have had in the business, unless it is a passive one. It is evidently the 3rd Queen's Own Cavalry that initiated the shunt, and the Bombay Head-quarters staff accomplished it. The case seems almost as bad as that of the young officer who was harassed and forced to leave the East Yorkshire Regiment two years ago and apply for the Staff Corps. The application was written for him, and he was forced to sign it.

LAND SERVICE IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

After reading Stepniak's book on Russia and the lot of the unfortunate peasants there we in India might rest thankful that the great reforms in the land laws which Government have silently introduced have proceeded upon lines more in accordance with the conditions of each province than as logical conclusions of political economy. In Bengal and partly in Madras, a heroic scheme of land settlement was inaugurated, following too faithfully the maxim of the magic of property; but the error was discovered and acknowledged in time, and the ancient tenure of each locality have been preserved after pruning them of their eccentricities. The result has been simplicity, certainty, and regularity, and liberality in assessment has marked the beginning of each reform. We have our land problems and our agrarian questions, but our mistakes do not lie in forcing upon an unwilling people a novel system unsuited to their conditions and alien to their habits and traditions, and if there has been a bias in our dealings it has been in favour of the peasant and against the landlords. In Bengal and the North-West we have restricted the rights of the landlord, and have recognised rights of occupancy in the tenants at moderate rents. In the Deccan we have secured the ryot in his holding on easy terms, and have given him fixity of tenure, fair rents, and guarantees against undue enhancement of the tax. We have spread railways over the provinces, and have given a vast impetus to the extension of cultivation, but we have no reason to believe that the land tax is heavy or that the revenue is collected by floggings and brutalities. The tax is paid punctually by many millions, and the condition of rural families has greatly improved. But our troubles are caused by the unfortunate habit of borrowing at high interest which is almost universal, and the struggles between creditors and debtors. We desire to keep the land for the peasant, and we endeavour to throw obstacles in the way of its passing to usurers and middlemen, but the problem is almost insoluble how to let the ryot make use of his credit without abusing it. Railways have conquered famine, but usury is more destructive, although it may not be so obvious, as famine. The agricultural relief acts are good in their way, but they are very partial and imperfect remedies for a deep-seated disease which can only be cured by the self-restraint and co-operation of the people. The increase of population coincides with the decrease of arable land which is available, and the problem which must next engage attention is the movement of large bodies to new houses. Debt and congestion are the two evils which prize upon the attention of Government, but they are evils which do not arise from maladministration but from bad habits, over which Government can have no control, and from the inevitable conditions of progress and prosperity. The circumstances of the Indian ryot are tolerable and hopeful, while we cannot but deplore the unfortunate position of the Russian peasant. Stepniak's picture might be overdrawn and overdosed by his strong socialistic tendencies, but there is enough in his book to make us ponder anxiously how the nation will extricate herself from the difficulties with which they are surrounded. That she will do so, we have no doubt, but the situation meanwhile is full of peril and extreme tension.

THE MEMBER FOR INDIA.

(Madras Times.)

Telegrams are stated to have gone forth from different parts of India conveying to Mr. Bradlaugh's daughter "the universal regret felt for her father's serious illness, and prayer offered for his speedy recovery." Perhaps now these messages will be followed by some to the medical man in attendance, thanking him for the timely and welcome prescription which is to bring the Member for India out here, and to enable him to attend the next meeting of the "National Congress." Mr. Bradlaugh is an Atheist; he admits it, and we might even say he glories in it. When he can smile again, surely he will smile at the idea of a "universal prayer in India on his behalf, and of prayers in the Episcopal and Dissenting Churches of Northampton!" There is something for the cynic in this thought of a "universal" prayer for the man who, presumably, will not pray for himself. Of late months Mr. Bradlaugh has acquired importance, and a sort of popularity. We rejoice with his intimates that he has not been called away, and, perhaps, even he may justify our hopes that his present influence upon the Congress will prove beneficial to the true interests of India and its Indians. This can only be judged later on, however, and till then we cannot pretend to think that he has yet done anything to merit the extraordinary solicitude which is said to have been displayed in Northampton, and in "different parts of India."

INDIAN PETITIONS.

(Englishman.)

Petitions may be numbered among the plagues of official life in India. Scores of complaints of an informal and preposterous character are sent up directly to the Government of India, in spite of all the rules that have been laid down. It is difficult, however, always to sympathise with the Government in this matter, for no proper attempt seems to be made to bring the rules on the subject to the knowledge of the likeliest classes of offenders. Now and then the rules make a furtive appearance in the official Gazettes, but these publications appeal to a very limited audience, and the result is that the prohibitions can hardly be said to be generally known. But that they are so voluminous we should be glad to give Government the benefit of a free advertisement; all we can do, however, is to refer intending petitioners to the last Gazette of India, in which the rules are set forth in all their complexity. Even yet it is probably not as widely known as might be desired that officers who wish to petition Government must do so separately. This rule, we think, is a mistake. Its effect is to force petitioners into a position of unfair prominence, and, as a matter of fact, many grievances have been brought to our knowledge by officers who were afraid to petition lest they might incur the displeasure either of their immediate superiors or of Government. It may, of course, be said that this is the very object for which the rule is framed. But real grievances are not got rid of in this way, and it is not in the interests of Government or of the public service that genuine hardships should be perpetuated. In some cases the effect has been to drive men with their grievances to Parliament, and the success of one effort in this direction is calculated to lead to a dozen fresh attempts. On the whole, it would be better policy were Government to establish as close a connection with the services as possible, with the view of doing its own cobbling at home.

SUCH IS FAME.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Nobody in India expects that the home papers as a whole will betray any extraordinary interest in Indian affairs, but really we should have imagined that the leading military paper would by this time have acquired some little knowledge about the Sikkim Expedition, which came practically to an end exactly a year ago. The Army and Navy Gazette in a recent issue appears to be under the impression—no doubt a very natural one under the circumstances—that operations were directed against the inhabitants of Sikkim, and remarks that "it is earnestly to be hoped that troublesome Sikkimese may have learnt a lesson by the experiences of the past. If they settle down quietly we shall let them alone; but any renewal of hostilities will compel us to take the field again in support of British authority, which must be maintained. Colonel Graham did his work admirably, and deserves full credit for the punishment he inflicted on the offending tribesmen." One or two correspondents of Indian papers insisted at the time that the men with whom we were at war were Bhutanese, but we have always imagined that the people of Sikkim were rather on our side than otherwise, and certainly they never had any intention of taking up arms against us. Then, again, it would not have occurred to us to speak of the eleven thousand men whom the Lamas put into the field as "tribesmen," being as they were inhabitants of one country speaking one universal language. For an error such as the Army and Navy Gazette has put into print the Home Government is largely responsible. The Government of India proposed a clasp for "Tibet," but in England it was thought that "Sikkim" was more appropriate. Hence the remarkable paragraph quoted above, which is scarcely creditable to the leading military paper.

THE LAW AS TO INDIAN WIDOWS.

(Pioneer.)

An admirable judgment, which may be taken as settling once for all how much, or rather how little, has yet been done by the Western reformer for the millions of Hindu widows throughout India, was delivered the other day by Mr. Justice Muthuswami Aiyar in the Madras High Court. The case was one where a Brahmin, who had married a widow, brought a suit against the priests of a Hindu temple for damages in respect of their having forcibly debarred him from fulfilling his vows on the ground of loss of caste. The District Munsiff before whom the dispute was first brought decided for the plaintiff. Hindu widow remarriage, he said, had received the sanction of the Hindus of ancient days, and was not opposed to the general usage of the people. This is perhaps the most interesting feature of the case, inasmuch as it seems to show that the primitive Aryanism which Raghunath Rao and his disciples have been fervently and assiduously preaching for years back has not been altogether barren; but if the spirit of the Munsiff's Judgment was excellent, there is very little room for doubt that his law was bad. The Acts of 1850 and 1856, the learned Justice of the High Court pointed out, save a widow who marries again from the forfeiture of rights of property or inheritance, but "were not intended to repel the usage of Hindu temples or of religious or quasi-religious institutions;" since otherwise outcasts of all sorts and religions, for whom Hindu temples were neither founded nor kept up, might be introduced. As to the general question the state of the law was no less clear. If the Courts were at liberty to travel back to distant ages and examine into ancient Hindu law and usage, texts could no doubt be found in the Vedas and Smrities sanctioning the remarriage of widows; but this was altogether inadmissible. The business of the judiciary was simply to see what was the Hindu law as received and practised by the Hindu community in general, and to enforce it when so ascertained; and there is no question that the predominant usage with the Brahmins does prohibit remarriage. The opposition between the Judge and the reformer, between the law and the gospel, was never more clearly put, nor can the force of the reasoning be disputed. It is no part of a Judge's business to improve the law; nay, unless prevented by public opinion acting on the Legislature, his judgments, as Sir Henry Maine constantly insisted, tend to retard reform. The moral is obvious. If silly customs, such as that which outcasts a woman for remarrying who has never in any commonsense view of the term been married at all, are to be abolished, and their abolition sanctioned by statute, the outcry against them in the Hindu community must become more general and more emphatic; there must be more men like the Munsiff at Rajamundry, whose perception of the necessity of reform was so strong as to warp his judical acumen. Then only it may be practicable for the legislature to step in and give the help which every friend of progress and humanity so earnestly desires to see accorded.

TENURE OF LUCRATIVE MEDICAL APPOINTMENTS.

(Madras Mail.)

"Anon" writes:—"You lately stated that the right of officers of the Indian Medical Service to refuse promotion on account of holding lucrative appointments has been referred to the Secretary of State. There is a widespread feeling in the Service that the inquiry might be extended still further, and, in short, whether it would not be for the good of the Service that all appointments of the so-called 'lucrative' class should only be held for a period of five years. In the Army it used to be 'once on the Staff—always on the Staff'; but now five years is fixed on as the limit. In the Indian Service there are a few—very few—appointments which involve knowledge and skill of a special kind. These appointments, which are nearly all in the Presidency town, are usually held by officers who have occupied their comfortable positions for double and treble the Army allotted period of five years; then, when the time comes for a Deputy Surgeon-Generalship, or a staff appointment in the field, the fortunate officer comes out of his shell, and puts on uniform again. I do not say but that the appointments in Madras are held by officers of exceptional ability and skill, for it is well known all over India that Madras in the medical profession is certainly not of the Cinderella order; but when the bulk of the Service know, as they do now, that they have no chance of promotion to any of the plums of the Service, then the chief incitement to work and self-improvement is gone, and what little ambition they once had soon disappears. Let it be known that appointments will occasionally be vacant and available for officers who are qualified to hold them; then an incitement will be given, and a keen competition will spring up which will result in better work being done all round. Surely there is more than one officer in the Indian Medical Service who is qualified in one speciality or the other to hold an appointment in Madras?"

INDIAN RAILWAY REFRESHMENTS.

(Pioneer.)

Several correspondents have complained of late of the steady decline in the quality, and even the quantity, of food supplied to travellers on Indian railways by the keepers of refreshment-rooms. It is not one line, but practically all lines, which are condemned for the want of proper arrangements to secure the comfort of the travelling public. Badness of quality is serious enough, but when it comes to absolute insufficiency even at large halting stations, the patience of the public may well be exhausted. Instances have been furnished to us, however, in which first-class passengers have actually been reduced to a state of semi-starvation owing either to the remissness of the guard of a train in not having used the telegraph to warn the refreshment-room keeper or to the latter's wilful neglect to provide wholesome food. There are, of course, certain important stations, well known by their rarity, where the catering is good, but in the majority of cases the traveller is given food—though joints, poisonous rechauffes, and greasy curries—which ruin alike his temper and his digestion. This charge lies alike against State lines and those managed by private companies, and we are confident that it will be endorsed by hundreds who use the railways. To make matters worse the prices have steadily risen of late years, until three rupees for a dinner which cannot have cost the caterer one, has become quite a common charge. We cannot undertake to say why this increase has been made; but if it is due, as alleged, to the action of railway managers in making a higher profit out of their refreshment-rooms, an indignant protest by railway travellers should be raised against such a policy. . . . Some there are who take the remedy into their own hands and refuse to pay the exorbitant prices charged for a wretched meal; and, curiously enough, they never hear further from the caterer, though the latter is given every opportunity of seeking redress. It may not be desirable that this practice should be universally adopted; but in particularly flagrant cases it is certainly justifiable. Travellers can scarcely take combined action in formulating a complaint at their journey's end, as they each go their separate way; but they can refuse en masse, in a refreshment-room, to pay for a meal which they could not partake of. The railway authorities will then perhaps begin to realise that their passengers decline to be fleeced in order that the company may show a goodly profit on their so-called buffets. One hint to travellers, and we have done. In the majority of stations the proper person to complain to is the station-master, who is bound to forward any report of mismanagement to his superiors, and there is supposedly a complaint book in every refreshment-room wherein opinions may be freely recorded.

SLAVERY IN THE PUNJAB.

(Madras Mail.)

Another case of abduction of women, for the purpose of selling them to the cultivators in Sind, has, writes a contemporary, been brought to the knowledge of the Punjab police. On this occasion the victim was a girl about sixteen years old, the wife of a Mahomedan peasant of the Amritsar district; while the accused is, like all others of his stamp, a Mazbi Sikh, named Jetha Singh, of the village of Jhullianwala, situated in the Lahore district. The Sikh, being in quest of women who could be easily enticed away from other districts, had an eye upon this girl, and to carry out his evil intentions he endeavoured to gain access to her house. For this purpose he made the acquaintance of her uncle, and very often volunteered to be the bearer of errands from her uncle to the girl, and vice versa. Having gained the confidence of her people in this way he one day told the girl that her mother was very ill, and had expressed a desire to see her at once. The girl followed Jetha Singh, who brought her to the village of Jhullianwala and kept her at the house of a Jat, an accomplice of the accused, and the next morning told her that her mother had left this to live at another village, which was fourteen miles from there. The girl, suspecting something wrong, refuse to go any further, upon which the accused is alleged to have ill-treated her, and dragged her out of the house. The girl followed him through fear, and on arrival at the village of Barka Kalla he told her that he would get her a rich husband if she went on quietly, and that he had more women staying at his house who were anxious to become rich by marriage, and that he was arranging to get them married to rich people in the village. The girl remonstrated with the accused, but seeing that the latter was becoming furious she kept quiet. On reaching the next village, however, she flew from her companion to the people who were working in the fields and asked for their protection. The cultivators pursued Jetha Singh, who was trying to escape and, having secured him, brought him to the lumbardar, who reported the matter to the police. The case is still being inquired into. The accused is one of a gang of Sikhs who have made it a practice of trading in women. Their headquarters appear to be situated in the Lahore district, but no clue has yet been ascertained as to its actual whereabouts.

Another batch of four habitual traders in women were arrested at Dera Ghazi Khan the other day, where they had put four young women, decoyed away from the Lahore district, in the market there for sale. The authorities there took cognisance of the matter, and have sent the accused, together with the women, to Lahore for necessary inquiry and trial. These women apparently belong to a consignment of females who were recently sent in boats by the Ravi to Sind from a village situated not far from Lahore.

A man named Kishen Singh is alleged to be a great dealer in this slave trade, and the authorities in Sind have undertaken to offer every facility to the police in procuring evidence against him in particular.

This disgraceful traffic in women, which reflects badly on the British administration in the Punjab, has been carried on from time immemorial, and we are glad to hear now that the authorities are taking decisive measures for its prevention.

THE NEW A.D C

(Pioneer.)

From a social point of view the opening of the year in Calcutta promises to be unusually brilliant. We hear that several extraordinary A.D.C.'s will be temporarily appointed on the Viceroy's Staff—Englishman, October 25th.

A new type of A.D.C. ! Proud will Calcutta be !
Royalty, fireworks, stars, rocket-sticks !
Quite, from a social point, putting clean out of joint Jubilee season of Queen's 1886.

Princes, and plain T. G.'s ; snobs, too, and Peeresses ;
Likewise, globetrotters as much as you please ;
But, among all of them, pick of the haul of them,
Several extraordinary new A.D.C.'s

None of your ordinary flock. They have all got the knock,
Baggage and aiguilettes, feathers, and lace ;
Out with their simpering, scampering, whimpering,
Room for the new extra-ordinary race !

Who are these A.D.C.'s, City of Palaces ?
Say, what extraordinary type possess ?
Are they bolder and brightier, lovelier, lighter ?
How do they dance, ride, smile, flirt, look and dress ?

Every new A.D.C.'s nice as youth can be ;
Reads the Gazettes, and the Church Service through ;
Thinks his vocation grand ; hopes soon to understand
Mobilisation, and signalling too.

Every new A.D.C. soon as you meet him, he Asks you to order him just as you will ;
Begs you to state your views on the last nursery news ;
Shakes his head gravely o'er Annandale "Bill."

Every new A.D.C. likes cake, and milk, and tea ;
Totalizators, gymkhanas, abhors ;
Keeps but one pony, whose carcase is bony ;
Rarely, if ever, seen out of doors.

Every new A.D.C. speaks in the accents he Learned from his mother's lips, soothing and staid :
"Dear me !" "You don't say so !" Never "Confound !" or "Blow !"
Even superlatives make him afraid.

Every new A.D.C. soars above flattery,
Bows to a subaltern, chaffs an L.G.,
Jokes with a learned Judge, says to a General "Fudge !"
Cries to a Councillor, "Fiddle-de-dee !"

Every new A.D.C. gives all the time that he Spares from the labours and duties of State
To his noble profession, and gaining possession
Of all that is useful to pack in his pate.

Every new A.D.C. cannot abide to see Beauty or youth ; but, in ball-rooms, alone
Seeks out, by preference, ladies of common-sense ;
Toothless, and youthless, mature chaperone.

Every new A.D.C., pink of propriety,
Never learns gossip and never repeats ;
Thinks cards offensive, billiards expensive ;
Ten o'clock finds him safe under the sheets.

Every new A.D.C. studies economy,
Pays all his tradesmen, and keeps each receipt ;
His conduct is spotless, his character blotless,
His morals are blameless. (He's not got a seat.)

Regeneration, a novel creation,
Purification, a something to see,
The Lord's own anointed, temporarily appointed,
Extraordinary may be, but scarce A.D.C.

BENGAL.

(Nov. 6.)

It is practically settled, a Calcutta paper learns, that there will be no St. Andrew's dinner in Calcutta this year.

The British India steamer Bhundara left Calcutta for Chittagong on Oct. 28 on her second trip with men, animals, and stores for the Chin-Lushai Expedition. Captain Montagu and Lieutenant Willoughby, in charge of over 800 transport coolies from the Punjab, proceeded in her. Twelve elephants were safely stowed in the hold in the short space of forty-four minutes, or an average of less than four minutes for each elephant. The General commanding the district and officers of the Presidency Staff were present, while two photographers were on the spot to take advantage of the somewhat rare opportunity. On her next voyage the Bhundara will convey the Scottish Borderers to Burma, and on the voyage after will take over 550 mules.

At a meeting of the Jute Manufacturers' Association, which was held on Wednesday, it was proposed to nominate the members of the Committee to which, at the meeting of the 16th inst., it had been resolved to entrust the task of ascertaining the net cost of the various descriptions of jute goods. Another matter under consideration was the licensing of brokers, with a view, we suppose, to limiting their business to transactions with the associated mills. It is not surprising that the further discussion of both proposals has been postponed sine die. When the former was first mooted we expressed the opinion that it would be as impracticable as, after a fortnight's consideration, it has been acknowledged to be ; and for the latter we can only express our astonishment that a suggestion so strange should have met with any serious entertainment. The mills are still displaying much unnecessary anxiety as to the effects of the abolition of "minimum" rates. The first effect has been the cessation of the so-called "free port" business, and it does not require much judgment to foresee a practical illustration of economic law which forbids that in the same free market and at the same time there should be more than one price for a given article. What that price will be, must depend upon the now unhampered operation of supply and demand.—Englishman.

MADRAS.

(Nov. 6.)

The Dewan of Travancore is at present engaged in collecting statistics as to the number of juvenile criminals now undergoing incarceration in the various jails of the Travancore State, and the periods of imprisonment they have still to work out, to enable him to decide as to the necessity or otherwise of proposals for establishing a "Reformatory," the need for which has often been urged upon the attention of the Maharajah.

The receipts on account of stamp revenue in the Madras Presidency during the year 1888-89 amounted to Rs. 61,35,607, and the charges to 3,87,212, against Rs. 59,71,669 and Rs. 3,30,963, respectively, in the year preceding, showing an increase of Rs. 1,63,938, under receipts, and of Rs. 56,249 under charges. The net revenue, after deducting the charges for the year, came up to Rs. 57,48,395, and exceeded that for the previous year by Rs. 1,07,689. This is the highest figure ever reached. It shows, among other things, that Sir Richard Barlow has very efficiently performed the troublesome duties of Superintendent of Stamps, in conjunction with the duties of some half-dozen other appointments that he fills. The Superintendent was, until lately, a "whole time wallah," and he drew Rs. 1,000 for his trouble, and for the risk he ran as custodian of a large stock of valuable stamps. At the beginning of the year 1888-89 Sir Richard Barlow had the charge of 186 lakhs worth of stamps, and on the 31st March he held stamps of the value of Rs. 1,87,60,806, or nearly two crores of rupees. He was instrumental in collecting a revenue of 57½ lakhs of rupees, but not one anna did he draw for his special trouble.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made to give effect to a recent order of Government, sanctioning the erection a saluting battery at Ootacamund, and three guns were ordered and arrived there the other day. The battery will be erected on Stonehouse Hill, and, as soon as it is ready, the guns will be placed in position. One day last week the Commander-in-Chief, with Colonel Tillard and others, was present at Stonehouse to witness a trial of the guns. The Native detachment stationed at Ootacamund during the season will receive instructions in view to firing the necessary salutes of honour.

BOMBAY.

(Nov. 8.)

MR. F. A. PHILIPS, the well-known artist of Medows-street Bombay, has just completed a life-sized portrait of the Hon. Mr. F. Forbes Adam, C.I.E., which is to be hung in the Board-room of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, of which Mr. Adam is chairman. The picture in all its details shows that it has been done by a master-hand, and those who know its popular original will at once agree that Mr. Philips has succeeded in producing a lifelike portrait of him. It may also be pointed out that the handsome picture of the Hon. Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit, hanging in the Board-room of the Institute, is the work of the same clever painter.

THE following is the summary of the Bombay Presidency season reports for the past week:—Slight rain during week in parts of Sholapore, Satara, Bijapore, Belgaum, Dharwar, and Kanara. Crops slightly damaged by rats, locusts, and caterpillars, respectively, in parts of Kurrachee, Hyderabad, and Upper Sind Frontier. Bajri in one taluka of Ahmednugger injured by locusts, and early crops generally in two talukas of Sholapore by the late rain. Crops otherwise good. Harvesting of early crops and sowing of late crops progressing generally. Fodder scarce in parts of Hyderabad. Agricultural stock good, except in two talukas of Kurrachee and one of Khandeish.

AT intervals within the last few months a Bombay contemporary has, says the Pioneer, by the mouth of its London correspondent, hinted mysteriously at a great financial operation by which the rupee is to be sent up to 1s. 9d. or thereabouts before a year is over; and, though the melodramatic manner in which the announcements have been made is scarcely calculated to inspire confidence, it is just possible that some of the sufferers from the depreciation of the rupee may have had their hopes unduly raised. It may be as well, therefore, writes the Allahabad paper, to state what has actually happened. The idea of a Silver Syndicate, which should corner silver as the famous Copper Syndicate in Paris cornered copper, only without the possibility of a similar disastrous issue, originated in the mind of Mr. Moreton Frewen when in India last cold weather; and when Mr. Frewen went home in the spring he elaborated the aperçu into a definite scheme, which he laid before several of the leading financiers of London and New York. By some of these it has been pronounced theoretically feasible; but its details are so difficult to work out, the operations and issues it involves so vast, that no one has yet been induced to accept it as within the scope of practical finance. This may come in time, but, on the other hand, it may never come at all, and, in the meanwhile, it certainly cannot be said to afford the definite prospect of relief the Bombay paper's correspondent would have us believe. That Mr. Frewen is of this opinion himself is proved by the fact that he is fighting as vigorously as ever in the front rank of the bi-metallic army—a useless struggle were it certain that the rupee was to be sent up through the mere manipulation of silver by a few gigantic operators.

THE Indian Daily News thus refers to the report that Mr. A. F. Maconochie has been placed on special duty to prepare an official memoir of Mr. Crawford's official career:—The necessity for this withdrawal of a public servant from his legitimate work is not very obvious. The natural suspicion will be that the Bombay Government is determined that so far as its efforts and influence can ensure such a result Mr. Crawford's name shall be handed down to posterity with a blacker mark against it than the finding of the Special Commission warrants. If Mr. Maconochie's compilation is intended as a warning to future members of the Bombay Civil Service against the evils of reckless expenditure and borrowing there might be some excuse for it, though the publicity the case has already received would seem to make the work somewhat superfluous. But in common decency, after the Commission's report, the Bombay Government should drop the more serious allegations against the reputation of an official, who, whatever his failings, did much good and useful work in his time. A contemporary remarks: "If the memoir has been ordered to be compiled in a spirit of fairness, there will not be much to complain of; but with party feeling running high in the Presidency, it is just possible that the record may be very one-sided, particularly as regards its closing chapters." The spirit displayed by Lord Reay's Government, and the humiliation it has suffered through its indiscretions in connection with the Crawford case, certainly warrant this apprehension. At the best, there will be a suspicion of malice. And, after all, why is such a memoir wanted? Does the Bombay Government want to have it made a text-book in connection with the Civil Service Examination? Perhaps it would be well for Lord Reay to accept the lesson of the indemnity incident, and take the opinion of his legal advisers, before publishing the contemplated memoir, as to whether ground for a libel action would be given by travelling beyond the record of the Commission's finding?

THE following resolution appears in the Gazette of India regarding the retention in office of thirteen mamlutdars:—In the letter of 2nd September last, cited in the preamble, the Governor-General in Council accepted the view of the Bombay Government, that the officials incriminated by the disclosures made in the course of the recent inquiry into the charges against Mr. A. T. Crawford might be divided into two classes. In the first class were to be included those who had either practically volunteered the payment of bribes to secure their own objects, to gain undue promotion, or escape the fruits of previous misconduct, or who paid money on but slight provocation, or under slender temptation; and in the second class, those who only paid under extreme pressure, in order to avoid unmerited degradation, unjust supersession, or ruinous transfer, or who gave money in despair, and on repeated applications to prevent, as they believed, the blasting of their official careers. The Government of India considered that, while those who came in the first category must be dismissed without delay, compensation being given to such as had made disclosures under guarantee against loss, and who had fulfilled the conditions attached to that guarantee, those who fell in the second category need not necessarily be removed from the public service, and it announced its readiness to declare that those from whom payment of money had been virtually extorted had not beyond doubt incurred the disabilities enacted by the Statute 49 George III., Chap. 126, and need not be dismissed. In its letter No. 6,944, dated Sept. 17 last, the Government of Bombay reported to the Government of India its views as to those officials who should be placed in the second category; and after carefully considering the circumstances of each case, the Governor-General in Council has determined that Lakshman Moreshwar Deshpande, Lakshman Chintaman Phadke, Ramchandra, Yashwant Chaubal, Balkrishna Govind Sindekar, Devrao Kakheshwar Chincholikar, Ganesh Pandurang Thakar, Vishnu Raghunath Kelkar, Moro Raghunath Bivalkar, Vasudev Ramchandra Patvardhan, Sakharam Chimnaji Joshi, Janardan Eknath Sahasrabudhe, and Ramrao Hanmant Rajguru need not be dismissed from the public service.

THE question of Sir Evelyn Wood succeeding H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught in the Bombay command has now been settled. He will not go out. Sir George Greaves (who would have succeeded General Wood at Aldershot (had that officer gone to Bombay) has been nominated for the command, and his appointment only awaits confirmation by Lord Cross.

LIEUT.-COLONEL NORMAN STEWART, eldest son of General Sir Donald Stewart, Bart., G.C.B., has been appointed to the command of the Merwara Battalion, a local force which has its headquarters at Ajmere, and since its re-embodiment has been successively under the command of the present General C. R. Blair, Colonel F. W. Boileau, and Major Creagh, V.C. Lieut.-Colonel Stewart gained a brevet majority in Afghanistan, and his present rank for services with the Indian contingent at Suakim in the 1885 campaign.

THE SAD FATALITY AT LANDOUR.—A correspondent writes from Mussoorie:—"Young Patton, the lad who accidentally shot his sister dead at Landour, has, it is feared, become permanently deranged, as he has to be detained in hospital attended by two soldiers. The scene at the house of the deceased, after the funeral party had returned home, was most painful; the young man having repeatedly implored his father to shoot him dead, as he could not live after killing his sister, whom he loved so dearly. His request not being complied with, he left the house secretly, and was found many hours afterwards lying in a state of insensibility on his sister's grave." The tragedy was the result of a joke, Miss Patton having defied her brother to shoot her with what both brother and sister thought was an unloaded gun. The challenge was promptly accepted, and the gun aimed at the eye of the deceased, with the result that the charge lodged in the throat and caused immediate death.

CONGRESS AND COIN.

THERE is trouble in India amongst the brotherhood of patriots who call themselves "The National Congress," and who have banded together to demand justice from England for the "down-trodden millions" who are declared to be pining in their bondage for "Home Rule." The trouble is about coin. The delegates in India and their representatives in London are as ready as ever to spout and write sedition, but they do not expect to have to do this for nothing. The labourer even of the dirtiest of trades is worthy of his hire. But this does not seem to be the opinion of the Standing Committees appointed by the Congress to carry on the game of political agitation here and in India. Funds are not forthcoming, or are grudgingly given, and so there is now agitation amongst the agitators themselves. The Morning Post of Allahabad states that the chief apostle of the Congress in India, Mr. A. O. Hume, has written to the "Standing Committees" to say that if the expenses of an English agency are not guaranteed at the approaching convention in Bombay he will have nothing more to do with the Congress! This is news, and sad news indeed; but it appears that Mr. Hume had to pay Rs. 10,000 out of his own pocket towards the last year's expenses, owing to the Poona Committee neglecting, and the Bombay Committee positively refusing, to pay their contributions. These honourable Councillors, holding with honest Pistol that "base is the slave that pays," have evidently taken Mr. Hume's liberality as a contribution dictated by his zeal in a righteous cause, or as a sort of "conscience money" which, as the former recipient of an official salary wrung from the poor Indian taxpayer, he feels bound in some way to return. When Mr. Hume retired from the service of the British Government in India, and took to seditious agitation as an excitement, or a means of getting cheap popularity, he could hardly have expected that his Native friends would "let him in" for paying Rs. 10,000 of their promised contributions to the cause which they all declared that they had so much at heart. But it is very like Babú—to promise and not to pay. The question now is, What is to be done if Mr. Hume carries out his threat of severing his connection with the National Congress? He has done more than anyone else to furnish fuel for the fire of discontent, and has plied the bellows strongly to keep that fire alive; but he is now feeling that his superabundant zeal has been anything but profitable to himself. Our contemporary, the St. James's Gazette, puts the matter very neatly:—"Mr. Allan Hume, C.B., the retired Indian Civil Servant who invented the Indian National Congress, is beginning to find that it does not pay. The agitation can only be kept alive by enlisting the sympathies of people in England; but this requires a paid agency, and although Mr. Bradlaugh and, doubtless, Sir William Hunter give their services for nothing, other friends of India are less generous. According to Mr. Hume, the English agency, managed by Mr. William Digby, whose letters on the Congress are published every now and then in the Times, expects to be paid "the paltry sum" of £2,500 a year; and unless Indian patriots are prepared to find the money they are unfit, Mr. Hume declares, to govern themselves. He himself has been spending money on the Congress out of his own pocket; but he does not mean to spend any more. It is curious to think that a dangerous and seditious agitation should have been promoted, and supplied with the sinews of war, by a pensioned servant of the British Government, who was created a Companion of the Bath for services during the Mutiny. It may be hoped, however, that we have now heard the last of it."

We do not for a moment suppose that we have heard "the last of it." On the contrary, we are quite prepared to find "explanations" or indignant protests from members of Congress and their friends in the columns of the Press in India and here—and we do not suppose that Mr. William Digby, who also condescends to wear a decoration from the Government whose good name he is attacking, will allow the matter "to fall into silence." We may expect a pleasant treat of mutual recriminations and upbraidings. When patriots fall out about payments much trouble comes.

But it is not only Mr. Hume, the English pensioned retired official of Government, who complains of the meanness of the men of Congress. Here is what a Native journal, the Rast Gaftar, says of them in one of its latest issues:—

"Is it right that the Native States should be pressed hard to extend a liberal pecuniary support from their impoverished exchequers to the so-called National Congress of half-educated British India? Strenuous exertions are being made to collect from other peoples' pockets the half a lakh that is estimated to be frittered away, during the coming Congress-week in Bombay, over the reception and entertainment of self-elected delegates who represeut themselves; and the fleecing of a good round portion of this half a lakh out of the poor purses of our princes and chiefs—the stock milch cows, common to all, for such purposes—is being vigorously pushed forward through private influences on sympathising karbharees, who may be willing that all manner of revolutionary reforms be introduced in the British administration, but not willing that any defects in their own be ventilated or discussed. We do not object to the youthful delegates from all parts of India making merry over their Christmas in Bombay at the expense of Bombay folks—and the Congress, as it has outgrown itself in its present proportions, is not more than a Christmas excursion ending in pleasant talk; but we do object to their enjoying a holiday at the expense of the poor ryots of the Native States unconcerned in the Congress."

A big social gathering is shortly to be held at the National Liberal Club here, in order to wish god-speed to Sir William Wedderburn on his approaching departure for Bombay to assume the Presidentship of the Congress about to be assembled there; but in the face of Mr. Hume's dictum that Indian Patriots who decline to pay even the "paltry" expenses of patriotism are unfit for self-government, how can there be enthusiasm or congratulations, however festive the occasion? There will surely be a bitter, disappointing taste in the draught of the loving cup as it is handed round—for Mr. Hume's threat may force it to be said of him:—

"You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting, With most admir'd disorder."

But there is another gentleman nearer home who is making an appeal for coin in order to carry on the Indian patriotic agitation against British rule. A Mr. Hira Lal Kumar is publishing a magazine at Oxford, intended to "give expression to the bonâ fide opinions of the Native and Anglo-Indian Press on Indian politics." But this youthful patriot is not inclined to carry on the work at his own cost, and he has therefore adopted a plan to raise the wind, which looks very like another attempt to levy blackmail on the Princes of India. He has sent an "Indian Appeal" to various Rajas, stating that he is circulating 2,000 copies of his magazine among members of Parliament and those that have a direct or indirect share in the Government—"with sole desire of doing some service to his dear country and countrymen." But he explains that the cost of printing, postage, and the like is heavy, and that he himself is only "a mere student of limited means," so he "will be highly obliged if His Highness will help him with a small sum in the publication of this magazine." This is the way of certain proprietors of vernacular newspapers in India, and if Mr. Hira Lal Kumar has not yet taken his degree at Oxford he has apparently graduated elsewhere in a form of arts which Native journalists have brought to a high state of perfection in the East. It is to be hoped, however, that the Indian Chiefs will be as deaf to his "appeal" as the "Standing Committees" of the Congress seem to be to the wail of Mr. A. O. Hume. These Chiefs are getting used to the ways of blackmailers of all kinds, European and Native, and they are gaining the courage to boldly refuse being further imposed upon, either by threats or specious promises. Let them only continue to be firm, and the result will be the discomfiture of many impudent beggars and the cessation of what has been long recognised as a grave scandal and disgrace. But if funds fail what is to become of the patriotism which delights in agitation and abuse of British rule? Who will spend time and tongue inaiding the cause of sedition if no profit is to ensue; or if, as in Mr. Hume's case, there is to be an actual loss out of pocket? It has been said that throughout the world there are many good people who would gladly act the part of the good Samaritan to their neighbours in distress were it not for the cost of the oil and the twopence; and so in India, and in England, too, will be found several philanthropic souls who will give much time and talk to forward the aims of busybody agitators, but who will not give money. And, without money, how are the Patriots to live?

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Sikkim Field Force treasure-chest has been abolished, and an ordinary treasure chest, such as allowed at Cherat in the hot weather, has been opened at Padong.

IT has been arranged to march the 4th Bengal Infantry from Jhansi to Agra in January, to receive new colours at the hands of Prince Albert Victor.

AN officer falling into the command of a second-class district by virtue of seniority will in future have his appointment notified in G.O.C.C. without reference to the Government of India.

IT having been brought to notice that no account is taken of sickness amongst officers when treated by Civil Surgeons, an order has been issued that all such cases are to be reported, and an officer in charge of a station hospital is to be furnished with a medical certificate whenever an officer is placed on, or taken off, the sick list.

A DISTRESSING incident occurred at Peshawar on the 26th ultimo. While the troops were on parade in the morning a soldier of the Royal Irish Fusiliers, let off parade to look after a bungalow, deliberately shot himself through the head. A verdict of insanity was brought in by the Court of Inquest. The deceased had twenty-one years' service.

THE Lahore paper does not like the Glengarry cap which Thomas Atkins wears:—"On active service the strings soon get torn off, and it is perhaps as well that they do, since in a high wind they are about as annoying a thing as a sentry has to face, and to a young soldier on picquet in a queer place they conjure up more unaccountable noises than he knows what to do with."

THE Civil and Military Gazette writes:—"The blundering of those officers responsible for the expenditure of public moneys finds another instance in the case of Captain Montague, of the 1st Battalion Suffolk Regiment, who was selected to take charge of coolies raised at Rawalpindi for the Chin-Lushai Expedition, and was sent from Jhansi to Rawalpindi only to find on arrival there that the coolies were at Calcutta, to which place he had to follow them up."

THE Secretary of State for India has notified that subscribers to the Indian Military Service Family Pension Funds can make special provision for pension to sons who may become permanently incapacitated from earning a livelihood. The pension so provided for will commence at the age of twenty-one if the son is then fatherless, or after that age on his becoming fatherless; and as regards the amounts of such pensions and the subscriptions to be paid to secure them, each case will be considered and determined on its merits.

THE NATIVE STATES' ARMY SCHEME.

INTERVIEW WITH MAJOR MELLIS.

(Times of India.)

At the end of last year we published an article regarding the scheme for organising armies in Native States, and at that time promised our readers further information as to the carrying out of the scheme on some future occasion. Finding the other day that Major Mellis, the Chief Inspecting Officer of the Native States' armies, was paying another visit to Bombay, our representative took the opportunity of interviewing him on the subject, and the interview, which we now publish, will, we are sure, be read with much interest.

After we had been chatting for some time about the scheme generally, I asked the Major whether he could give me any idea of the general progress made in the scheme in the past twelve months.

He replied: "Well, that is a very comprehensive question, and I cannot reply to it off-hand. Progress has been, however, satisfactory and steady."

"What is the actual number of men now in training to take the field should necessity arise?"—"About 12,000 or 13,000, cavalry and infantry. The men in training as yet are in the Punjab and Rajpoot States and Cashmere, but the Punjab State troops and those of Ulwa are most advanced."

"I see that the service cavalry of the Punjab States are to take part in the camp at Muridki, how do you suppose they will compare with our troops at the camp?"

With a very visible smile the Major replied,—

"You had better go and see."

"What I mean is this," I continued, "that as they are already so advanced in drill and training as to take part in a Camp of Exercise, they are presumably ready to take the field!"

"Well," retorted the Major still evasively, "they must go to Muridki first."

Who will command these troops at Muridki?—Their own officers.

Of the 13,000 men already in training, how many are in the Punjab, Rajpootana, and Cashmere?—About 5,000 in the Punjab, 3,000 in Cashmere, and the rest in Rajpootana.

What do you think of the Cashmere troops?—I believe the "Dogra" to be an excellent fighting man with proper pay, training, and discipline.

Is the Cashmere Contingent all "Dogras"?—No, about half are. The rest are Goorkhas—small hill men—and Sikhs.

Does the movement progress well in Rajpootana?—Decidedly, and with great enthusiasm.

What are the principal Rajpoot States reorganising their forces?—Jodhpore, Ulwar, Bhurtpore, and Bikanir are preparing most largely in men, while Jeypore organises an armed transport corps of 1,000 ponies.

Is there not a camel corps being formed in Rajpootana?—Yes, in Bikanir. It will consist of 500 Rajpoots of Bikanir, drilled and trained as an infantry regiment, armed with short B.L. Rifles. They will be mounted on 500 camels, which they will drive themselves, and the saddle will be double-seated, so that the corps will be able to carry another 500 soldiers in addition to its own strength.

Is this a new idea of yours?—"No, camels were used by Alexander the Great," responded Major Mellis, with a laugh.

Can you give me a general idea of the class of men forming these organised State troops?—They are all State subjects, men of excellent physique, the pick of the armies, and in most States are looked upon as the "State Guards."

Then I suppose the measure is popular with the soldiers?—Most undoubtedly.

And the Chiefs?—Now that the Chiefs thoroughly understand that the policy of the Government is to assist them in improving portions of their armies to become useful factors in any scheme for defence of the Empire should necessity arise, and that these forces are to be solely theirs under their own officers and not distinctly set aside specially for one purpose, the scheme is most popular with all, while some are intensely enthusiastic about it.

Whom do you consider the most enthusiastic Chiefs?—I will not individualise, but I think it goes without saying that those who have the instincts of soldiers are the men most keenly interested.

Will not this new organisation put the States to increased expense?—In some cases a little, but not necessarily, as in Ulwar, for instance.

What is the strength of Ulwar's Force of Guards, as you term it?—One Regiment of Lancers, 600; one Regiment of Infantry, 1,000. And they are then equipped and ready for service.

And without an increased cost to the State?—The Maharaja of Ulwar, as well as being a soldier, is a clever ruler, and a man of business as well; but I can tell you no more on this question.

Who is in command of the Ulwar's troops?—Colonel his Highness Mangal Singh, Maharajah of Ulwar.

Of course, you mean nominally?

"No," responded the Major, looking rather surprised, "I mean actively. He is a soldier and a Colonel in our army. He is daily on parade.

And do other Chiefs command their troops?—Yes, those who have a taste for soldiering, such as the Maharajah of Bhurtpore and Colonel Sir Pertab Singh of Jodhpore.

How many officers are under you in this organisation?—Some seven or eight.

Is it not rather beyond the powers of seven or eight officers to train 13,000 men?—The work is hard, but they are advisers and inspectors only, helping, by all means in their power, by counsel and suggestion, the Princes and their military administrators. For actual drill purposes they are assisted by Native instructors from our own regiments, and there are large classes of officers and non-commissioned officers of the Native States forces attached to our regiments for instruction.

Would it not be better to have an officer residing in each State?—No; because the Native officers must learn self-reliance, and command their own men on their own responsibility and not be under British command or any semblance to it. There are also other reasons which I cannot now discuss.

If any Native Prince wished particularly to have one or more English officers in his army, do you mean to say you would consider it open to objection?—It is not within my province to answer that question; but I have no doubt that if any such application was made by a Native Chief to the Government of India the circumstances attendant would receive full consideration.

Has anything been done in Hyderabad?—This scheme is a large measure, and India is a large country. We cannot do everything at once. The movement is not a year old yet, and naturally those States nearest the frontier received attention first.

You mean that no fixed plans have been arranged about Hyderabad?—I did not say so. I believe H.H. the Nizam's loyal and valuable offer has been well considered by the Government, and the way in which it will be accepted is pretty certain to be useful and pleasing to both Governments.

Are there any of the large States in India who have not offered to participate in this movement?—I think not.

But I hear of nothing being done in Central India?

"You may not hear of everything that goes on," Major Mellis sarcastically responded. "In Gwalior, for instance, there are 1,200 cavalry being organised, besides a transport corps of 500 animals."

And Indore?—As I said before, we cannot do everything at once.

May I ask whether their forces are being brought under our rules and regulations?—No, our rules are too complicated and elaborate. In States where no fixed military regulations have been actually in force hitherto, simple rules based on our's, but modified to suit circumstances, are being adopted.

Then you may have a number of different forces in the country all under different rules?—Not so; there will be continuity in system throughout. Military rule and law in its essence universal, while the method of its application may differ in different armies. Every Native Chief in India who has given thought to military matters would like to adopt our system simplifield, as I have said before.

Will this organisation of Native States troops in any way affect our own recruitment?—It will have the effect of, I think, stimulating the fading martial spirit in most of our warlike races in India, and opening new recruiting grounds to the army in India generally.

Having exhausted my long list of questions and the courteous Major's patience too, I expect, if the truth were only known, I closed my note-book and withdrew.

THE Bengal and North-Western Railway Company have applied to the Secretary of State for permission to construct a branch line to the grain mart at Revelgunge, as also the extension to Byram Ghat, which formed part of their original project, and was for the moment abandoned.

The Parents' Cabinet of Amusement and Instruction.

BY

MARTHA HILL and FRIENDS.

NEW EDITION.

EDITED BY

CONSTANCE HILL.

The School Board Chronicle says:—"It is a library of bright, lively, wholesome reading in short pieces—about twenty separate tales, fables, poems, articles, and sketches to the volume. Now that the work has been so handsomely and happily revised, no school library will be quite what it should be without it."

The Guardian says:—"We hope that the children of the present generation will welcome, as we remember doing, 'The Parents' Cabinet.' So much did we love the book that the sight is a real refreshment."

The Englishwoman's Review says:—"The work will be prized, we believe, by a new circle of readers for its own sake, as well as by those who re-read it to recall the impressions of their childhood."

The Scotsman says:—"All the articles are written in popular language, being well brought within the capacity of those for whom the work has been compiled. . . . Will prove one of the most popular productions of the season for the rising generation."

The Daily News says:—"Each book is complete in itself, in token of which the order is indicated, not by figures, but by stars. . . . Mrs. Hill was the inventor of this convenient method. . . . May be separated without assuming the appearance of odd volumes."

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham!—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent courseof its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armie, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying—"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 28, 1872.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 15th Nov.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 13th Nov.; and from Calcutta to the 13th Nov.

THE Viceroy and the Commander-in Chief reached Bannu, the starting point of his Excellency's tour along the Derajat border, on Nov. 7th. During Lord Lansdowne's stay at Bannu he opened the new bridge over the Kurrum River, and made some appropriate remarks on the great importance of bridges along the border routes in connection with the scheme of frontier defence.

H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR arrived in Bombay harbour at eight o'clock on Saturday morning, Nov. 9th, a few hours before he was expected. There was consequently some confusion in connection with the arrangements for his reception; but when he eventually landed with his Excellency the Governor and his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, who went on board the Oceana to receive the Prince, he was accorded a hearty welcome, and was cheered throughout his route to the railway station, from whence he left for Poona. He arrived at the latter place the same evening to remain there a few days as the guest of the Duke of Connaught. Prince Albert Victor is expected to reach Rangoon from Madras on Dec. 20th. He will spend Christmas in Mandalay.

THE proposed ball by the Bengal Club in honour of Prince Albert Victor has been abandoned, owing to the difficulty of fixing a suitable date during his Royal Highness's stay in Calcutta. A dinner is to be given instead.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN has arrived in Allahabad, and will probably remain there until the end of December.

THE vacancy in the Public Works Secretariat of the N.W. Provinces, caused by the appointment of Colonel Forbes to be Inspector-General of Irrigation, has not yet been filled up. The post will probably fall either to Lieut.-Colonel C. W. Harrison, Bengal, or Lieut.-Colonel G. T. Skipwith.

MR. MCWATTERS, Collector of Salem, has been appointed Sir R. W. Barlow's successor in Madras.

CAPTAIN GORDON, 6th Bengal Cavalry, who was recently appointed Camp Quartermaster to Prince Albert Victor's party, is lying dangerously ill with fever at Bombay.

A GOOD deal of practical business was got through by the Allahabad University Syndicate at their meeting on Monday, the 4th Nov., and following days. Bye-laws were drafted regarding the election of Examiners; resolutions passed concerning a practical alternative Entrance Examination; the refund of all money advanced by Government to the University ordered; a bonus granted to all Examiners who set question-papers; and the pay of the Registrar raised from Rs. 250 to Rs. 500 a month.

THE Jhansi Cases, in connection with which an important question of constitutional law as to the extent of the powers of the Indian Legislature was raised, came on for hearing before the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court on Nov. 11th. After hearing Mr. A. Strachey on behalf of the Government, for some time the Chief Justice stopped the case, and announced that judgment would be delivered in a few days, the Full Bench taking the view submitted by the learned counsel. This implies that the Court hold that the Government of India have full powers to make laws and regulations for all territories acquired since the passing of the Indian Councils Act of 1861, a judgment in accordance with which was delivered on Nov. 12th.

TANTIA BHIL, the hearing of whose appeal was deferred till the evidences of his confederate, Daulia, was recorded, was confronted with his whilom companion in outlawry in the Jubbulpore Jail on Nov. 9th, the two men readily recognising each other, and admitting that they escaped together with a third dacoit, Bijnia, from the Kandwa lock-up in 1878. Daulia made a statement in the presence of Tantia incriminating the latter in the Bhimphul dacoity, where the patel of the village was murdered. He asserted that he himself arrived after the man had been shot by Bijnia, and then saw Tantia, who was armed with a sword. The Judicial Commisssioner, Central Provinces, has confirmed the sentence of death passed on Tantia Bhil, whose only resource now is to appeal for clemency to the Viceroy.

THE Mohant of Tripati, who is charged with having stolen a large amount of treasure belonging to the temple of which he had charge, has been committed for trial to the North Arcot Sessions Court.

THE returns of India's foreign trade for the first six months of the year indicate a substantial improvement. The imports rose in value by over one crore, and the exports by nearly four and a half crores, the latter being increase almost wholly accounted for by larger shipments of seeds and raw cotton.

A DESTRUCTIVE fire occurred on the night of Nov. 11th in Apollo-street, Bombay, a ship chandler's shop and the offices of Messrs. Hore, Conroy and Brown, one of the leading firm of local solicitors, being burnt down.

THE Pony Derby, a race which now ranks only second to the Civil Service Cup at the meetings in Upper India, has been won this year at Lucknow by the Arab pony Magistrate. The time was one-fifth of a second better than that made by last year's winner, Blitz, who did the five furlongs in one minute and nine seconds.

DURING Prince Albert Victor's stay in Calcutta his time will be very fully occupied. The programme includes a State ball at Government House, another dance at Belvedere, a third to be given by the Maharajah of Kuch Behar, and the Bengal Club dinner.

THE Viceroy is still continuing his trip on the North-West Frontier.

HIS EXCELLENCY opened a bridge over the Kurrum.

A SCHEME is on foot for starting a Natural History Society for the Punjab.

IT is officially announced that State relief measures have been closed in Ganjam.

CULINARY AND MUSICAL SCHOOLS AT BARODA.—The Gujrati says:—One of the most novel features of the Educational Department of Baroda is the provision made by the State for practical instruction to the girls of two higher schools in the culinary art. Every Saturday afternoon, the girls, each of whom is supplied with a stove and pots and pans, get practical instruction at the hands of a cook attached to their school. We hope arrangements will also be made by the State for teaching other branches of domestic economy and fitting the pupils for the most delicate and responsible work that will devolve upon them as mothers. The experiment is extremely interesting, and we draw the attention of our Government to it. Baroda also possesses a music-school under the sympathetic management of the well-known Professor Moula Bux, who has his whole heart in the work. About 150 boys are receiving instruction, and are making excellent progress. These efforts on the part of the Maharajah to restore a divine, but a discredited, science in India deserve the highest commendation, and we hope other Native princes will emulate the enlightened efforts of the Gaekwar to ameliorate the condition of his subjects.

NOTES.

THE tour of Prince Albert Victor continues to be the chief matter of interest reported from India. The Viceroy returned to Calcutta on Saturday, and the Times' correspondent wires a precis of an educational speech which his Excellency delivered at the Punjab University, Lahore, deprecating any lowering of the examination standard. But Prince Albert Victor monopolises all attention just now. To welcome him with entertainments and addresses seems to be the end of everyone's desire.

THAT his Royal Highness is having no easy time of it may be guessed from his labours of the past few days. On Friday morning last he laid the foundation-stone of the Maharaja College at Mysore; in the evening he attended an official banquet, followed by a ball at Bangalore. On Saturday he presided at the opening of a horticultural exhibition and fête, and afterwards lunched with the 21st Hussars; another burra khana in the evening; attended church on Sunday morning, and left for Tinnevelly in the evening, the proposed visit to Madura having been abandoned in consequence of the prevalence of cholera at that place.

NOTWITHSTANDING his presence in church on Sundays —a ceremony which he is sure to observe strictly—some of the Indian papers have published a programme of his tour, according to which programme three Sundays had been set apart for shooting expeditions. Fortunately, before Exeter Hall has time to howl about "Sabbath desecration in high places," the report has been officially contradicted, H.R.H. having made no such engagements.

As the Court Circular—not the newspaper of that name, but the record of the doings of Royalty, which is said to be edited or supervised by very "superior persons"—discredits the story of the Prince having been charged at Mysore by an infuriated wild elephant, and only saved from a sudden and terrible death by the cool courage of Mr. Saunderson (to whom, by the way, Reuter gave the rank of Colonel)—perhaps we shall have no more sensational telegrams of the hair-breadth escapes of H.R.H., which seemed to commence from almost the moment of his landing at Bombay. But he certainly met with a chapter of accidents at first. There was a breakdown in the arrangements for his reception, owing, we are told by one paper, to the captain of the Oceana being "unable or unwilling to hold the splendid ship he commands." The Oceana was officially due at two P.M., but arrived at eight A.M., when all the chief actors in the reception programme were caught napping. But if the arrival was made too early compensation followed, for the departure of the Prince's train for Poona was delayed an hour and a-half by some mishap with the baggage. All's well, however, that ends well, and possibly by this time Bombay has forgiven the captain of the Oceana for his excessive "speed."

BUT the Pioneer draws a moral:—"A few days ago the Peninsular arrived in Bombay two days before the mail steamer, and last week the Oceana did the same. In other words, news is now frequently arriving in India from twenty-four to forty-eight hours before the mail packet subsidised by Government to bring the news in the shortest possible time. No clearer demonstration could be given that the last contract was settled without due consideration of the changed conditions under which steamship traffic between England and India is now carried on."

IN a letter to the Government of Bengal the British Indian Association objects to the proposed isolation of lepers, being of opinion that the disease is not so intensely infectious as to render isolation necessary. It admits at the same time that the majority of lepers are poor miserable wretches, who would be better cared for in a Hospital or Retreat than in their own houses. The Association thinks that some sections of the Draft Bill are too vague and general, and points out that there are several skin-diseases which are often mistaken for leprosy.

THE Englishman says:—Regarded as a matter of principle, although in no way objectionable on personal grounds, the officers of the Public Works Department, both civil and military, must regard the extension of Colonel Pemberton's service as secretary with unqualified disapproval. It means practically that the fifty-five years' rule can no longer be relied upon as a guarantee of promotion, and that, too, probably exemption from the rule will fall only to those who have been fortunate enough to serve in high places near or with the Government of India. At the same time, we readily concede that there may be, or, indeed, we may say must be, frequent cases where it would cause serious inconvenience to the public service to allow no latitude whatever in the exercise of this rule. We can only trust that Sir Charles Elliott is sufficiently aware of the disheartened state of the service which is under his charge, and that he will lose no opportunity of removing or opposing every cause which may tend to increase the prevalent feeling of discontent.

IN connection with the controversy as to the alleged rise in the price of salt in India the result is noted of an inquiry made some years ago in the Jullundur and Umballa divisions of the Punjab. A comparison was instituted between the selling prices of salt in rupees in 1850 and 1880, and it was found that there was scarcely any variation between the two years. This was at first sight disappointing, but a comparison of the prices in rupees of all other necessaries of life for the same period revealed the fact that they had risen by from 60 to 100 per cent. There could be but one conclusion drawn from this, viz., that salt had been steadily falling in price, and was practically far cheaper to the purchasers in 1880 than it was thirty years before. We imagine that this is true everywhere in India, except in places adjacent to salt sources, or where salt was practically not taxed under the old arrangements. The equalisation of the salt duty over all India had naturally some direct effect upon certain favoured districts; but the country as a whole benefited enormously by it.

THE Indian Engineering says:—"Lord Reay is anything but a man of business. He very rarely holds meetings of his Executive Council; seldom or never sees any of his Secretaries, one alone excepted; and, suspicious as weak men generally are, he is for ever seeking counsel on public matters from the editors of Native newspapers, and from private and often very far from disinterested persons." The Calcutta Statesman, not pleased with this remark, makes comment on it thus:—"The seeking of counsel from editors of purely Indian newspapers is an unpardonable fault it seems. But it is rather late in the day, as the Indian Mirror observes, to contend for the desirability of our rulers being like potter's clay in the hands of their Secretariats, though the fact of Lord Reay not being so has made him the most unpopular Indian satrap of the day. In the days of Sir Rivers Thompson we had an example in Bengal of what Secretariat rule means, and Sir Steuart Bayley has done well not to repeat the blunder. It is the dread of Secretariat rule that makes it so desirable in the eyes of many thinking people that Indian Lieutenant-Governorships should be conferred on statesmen appointed direct from England."

THE Madras High Court Judges have just passed orders that, after the 31st of December next, vakils, whenever they appear before a Court of Justice in the practice of their profession, should wear the black gown prescribed by the Madras University for the B.L. degree. This, a local paper says, has given the vakils great satisfaction, but the graduates of the Madras University must be different in one respect to those of the Calcutta University, who were wont to hire their gowns and caps for one day only—the day on which they were presented with their degrees and with an exhaustive address from the Vice-Chancellor on their intellectual attainments.

OUR system of education in India continues to show gratifying results. The District Superintendent of Police, Tinnevelly, has issued a very unique description of one R. Kristnasawmy Iyengar, who is "wanted" by the police. Under the heading of "any peculiarities of gesture or manner" it is stated that he "has a taste for music, and plays the fiddle." His nose is "slightly projected," and his mouth is "red," and the crowning peculiarity is that the "next finger to toe of each leg is slightly projected."

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 1.

The Viceroy returned to the capital yesterday and was received with the usual honours. His tour throughout has been most successful. During his stay at Lahore he was present at the Convocation of the Punjab University, where he received the degree of Doctor of Literature.

At the close of the proceedings his Excellency delivered a long address, in the course of which he said that during his recent tour he had been sitting at the feet of the Commander-in-Chief with the Quartermaster-General for private tutor, and had been going through a course which might be described as the science of frontier prophylactics. This had so prepossessed his thoughts that it was somewhat difficult abruptly to turn his attention to academic topics; but, after all, the defence of the Punjab and University affairs were more interdependent than appeared to be the case at the first blush, for unless the frontier were secure from aggression from without it was impossible that the arts and sciences could flourish from within. Still, he was quite alive to the fact that the duties of the Government only began with the protection of the Empire, and that its intellectual development was an important duty of domestic policy. After praising the system of the Punjab educational institutions as specially adopted to the needs of the Punjub population, amounting to twenty millions, and expressing confidence in the assured future success of the University, he proceeded to urge the students to cultivate education for its own sake, and not in the sole expectation of obtaining employment in the public service, as the number of Government appointments must always lag far behind the number of graduates. He desired also to remove the impression that sole reliance should be placed upon University teaching to establish ethical training; a University, even when clothed with religious sanctions, was unable to deal effectually and exhaustively with this important branch of education. The qualities of purity, modesty, and reverence must be inculcated and enfored outside the schools, in order that scholastic and dogmatic ethics might constitute a practical branch of University culture.

The leading features of Prince Albert Victor's tour during the week were a visit to Seringapatam and other scenes of historical interest in the neighbourhood, and his presence in the Maharajah's encampment during the operations for the capture of wild elephants. The Prince inspected the tombs of Hyder Ali and Tippoo, Colonel Bailie, and other British officers, and proceeded thence to visit Tippoo's famous garden house, the walls of the central rooms of which are covered with quaint Native frescoes depicting Hyder's victory over the British troops, with Colonel Bailie giving the orders of command, seated in a palanquin. The Duke of Wellington resided here after the siege. The Prince then minutely inspected the fort, which is in complete ruins, though the chief points of interest, the breach and the spot where Tippoo fell, have been carefully marked. From Seringapatam Prince Albert Victor went by special train to Mysore, where he was received at the station in great state by the Maharajah. The city was splendidly illuminated, and a State banquet was given in his Royal Highness's honour. The young Maharajah proposed the Prince's health in graceful terms, to which the Prince responded. On November 24th the Maharajah drove the Prince in his drag to the elephant camp, a distance of fifty miles. They then proceeded to the immediate scene o operations and witnessed a drove of thirty-five elephants successfully captured and stockaded. Next day the Prince was present whilst the elephants were being tied up. An infuriated female elephant approached dangerously near his Royal Highness, but was frightened off by the officer in charge. The following day was devoted to bison shooting, in which the Prince succeeded in wounding a bull whilst it was preparing to charge. On Friday the Prince laid the foundation stone of the Maharajah's college and then started by special train for Bangalore. He arrived in the evening, and was received by the General and a large number of military officers.

The Maharajah of Vizianagram, in replying to a recent address by the trustees of the Victoria-hall, Madras, said he was delighted to learn that the building would be utilised on the occasion of Prince Albert Victor's visit. Money spent on objects like this was far more to the public advantage than subsidising the Native Congress, which at present failed to fulfil its proper mission by turning its back upon all social reforms, and was therefore unable to justify the large expenditure devoted to furthering merely political agitation. He doubted, however, whether any words of his could induce the leaders of the movement to apply their minds to the needed reform of the Hindoo marriage system.

On the same occasion Lord Connemara presided at the ceremony of opening a fountain erected to the memory of Sir Charles Trevelyan, formerly Governor of Madras.

Three Hindoo brothers have been committed for trial for murdering a child-wife by torturing her to death by branding her all over the body with red-hot irons.

Mr. H. S. King was entertained at a public dinner at Bombay on Tuesday. In the course of an able and eloquent speech he strongly advised the members of the Uncovenanted Service to stand shoulder to shoulder and persist in their demands for the equitable consideration by Government of fair retiring pensions.

Great public sympathy is universally expressed for the widow of Colonel Heyland, who was recently shot at Deesa by a Native soldier. From later particulars it appears that the man first shot two Native officers, and, upon this being reported, Colonel Heyland rode up armed with a revolver, fired at the man and missed him, and was shot in return. The man, upon being arrested, stated that one of the Native officers had got him punished; that he shot Colonel Heyland because he first fired at him; and that now they might hang him, as all was over. Few officers of the Bombay army are able to show a record of more distinguished service than Colonel Heyland, and his loss is greatly deplored, equally on public as on private grounds.

The very heavy rains caused by the recent cyclonic disturbances have seriously injured the harvest prospects in certain districts, especially in Orissa, Ganjam, and Lower and Eastern Bengal.

A public meeting was recently held by Assam planters to protest against the policy pursued by a certain Assistant-Commissioner, and it was resolved to make direct representations to the Chief Commissioner for redress. In view of a late false charge of murder, it was resolved that the planters of the community were inadequately protected against conspiracy and persecution of this description, and that matters ought to be remedied at once.

Stores and troops are being rapidly concentrated for the Chin-Lushai Expeditionary Force. It is doubtful whether it will meet with serious armed opposition.

BURMA.

RANGOON, NOV. 30.

ON the 27th inst. Major Raikes met several minor chiefs of the Tashon Chin tribe, who were attended by 300 followers. Nothing was settled. Major Raikes will have a final meeting to-morrow with the more important Tashon chiefs, and on the result of this meeting war or peace with the Tashons will depend. Mr. MacDonnell has instructed Major Raikes to insist on the following four points:—The surrender of all captives carried away from British territory; a fine of 10,000 rupees as compensation for damage already done; the payment of an annual tribute of two elephants' tusks and seven pieces of silk; and a friendly reception of the British troops and their unopposed march through the Tashon territory. The following demands, which were originally included in the proclamation of Sir C. Crosthwaite, have been waived:—The surrender of the Shwaygyuobin Prince and the delivery up of guns. The troops continue to advance. So far the professions of the Tashons have largely exceeded their performances; they have only surrendered about one-sixth of their captives.

The Chin field force will first enter the territory of the Bonthe tribe, who are head-hunters and confirmed marauders. The same terms as those tendered to the Tashons have been offered the Bonthe tribe. The Chin expedition will only be punitive if resistance is offered, otherwise the people will be treated in a friendly manner, and all supplies taken will be amply paid for. It is considered important to survey the Chin territory with a view to opening up a route to India.

The policy of showing clemency to and releasing prisoners, inaugurated by Mr. MacDonnell in Upper Burma, has been extended to Lower Burma.

The Siamese Government are acting somewhat obstructively about the Frontier Commission, and are attempting dilatory tactics. The English and Siamese Commissioners will not now unite or act jointly.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF INDIAN TRADE.

(Madras Times.)

Lord Dufferin has spoken and as usual, well. There will be many to find fault, no doubt, with what he has said about the Kashmir raj, but the main part of his speech at the banquet provided by the London Chamber of Commerce dealt with trade, and it is upon his remarks on this point that we now touch. Lord Lansdowne is busy studying the position of affairs on our northern frontier, and seeing that due provision is made there. Lord Dufferin looks still further east to Burma, and impresses upon the manufacturers and merchants of England the grand potentialities of Burmese and, through this, of Chinese trade. There is scope for the development of India's trade within her own frontiers, there is room for railway development, and still more for agricultural development, but our ex-Viceroy hits upon the most promising field of all, when he mentions those provinces which he caused England to acquire. The complaint about the northern and north-western frontier is that the extension of Russian railway lines in Central Asia enables the Muscovite to drive the British trader out of the market. This might be remedied to a great extent, no doubt, and yet there are many things in Russia's favour, and the problem of ousting Russian goods and introducing English is one of no small difficulty. Russia understands that in districts such as those to which we allude railway extension must be accompanied and supported by military expansion, and it is just here that England would be likely to fail were she to attempt to push her lines beyond points where, with her present forces, she could provide ample protection for them.

We may well look elsewhere, therefore, for the development of trade which England longs for, and no more likely field is open than that offered by the occupation of Burma if carefully followed up by a development of water and land communications, intended to bring China into closer connection with the West, and to tap those rich producing centres of which we know so little, and of which the produce can only reach the Western world at present by a circuitous and expensive route, beset with the additional difficulties of numerous local imposts. Towards developing the necessary communications, British capital might do much; and unless that capital is forthcoming, the attempt to foster a large trade with Burma and China cannot make rapid progress. Lord Dufferin, therefore, has done good service in again impressing upon British merchants the power that lies in their hands, and in tempting them by visions of future riches to loosen those purse-strings which guard what is so essential to success. The development of Burma by means of capital and enterprise would be a grand achievement, and the more likely to prove permanently good, but it would be too much to look for after the experience which India has had of the dependence of her people upon British capital as a means of fostering trade.

Should Lord Dufferin's advice be followed, the time may yet come when Burma, laden with the heavy weight of large borrowings from England, will utter cries similar to those which have proceeded from India of late years. But this a is a matter which must of necessity be left for the future to decide, and future generations to deal with; and, meanwhile, we trust that British attention will be directed towards opening out "the land of promise," and endeavouring to tap on the West that Celestial Empire which is so difficult of more than superficial access on the East. There, as on the northern frontier of India, England will have to compete with Russia, but she will do this on more favourable conditions and with bright prospects of success. The cry of "languishing trade" must be followed by a vigorous effort to open up new markets, and to develop existing trade centres already in connection with English manufactures, and we here in India may remember that every rupee which is spent on facilitating communications between various parts of Burma, and between these and China, adds to the prospects of India's trade, for during many years to come India, as well as England, may find, to the East of the Bay of Bengal, a large and ever increasing consuming market for her wares.

THE TRADE OF CALCUTTA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Whatever be the position of the port of Calcutta as compared with the port of Bombay in regard to the magnitude or their commerce, there is no doubt that not only is the trade of Calcutta increasing, but that its increase spells ruin to the trade of the other ports of Bengal. The increase in the Customs duties levied on the trade of Calcutta last year amounted to nearly 44 lakhs, or 21 per cent., while there was a falling off in the duties levied at Balasore of 80 per cent., at Cuttack of 41 per cent., and at Puri of 85 per cent. One port indeed, Narayan Gunge, showed an increase of more than 650 per cent., but it was wholly due to the expansion of the salt trade. The figures for Calcutta are particularly satisfactory, for it is legitimate to conclude from them that the revenue is gradually coming up to the amount at which they stood previous to 1882, in which year the reduction of the salt duty, and the remission of all import duties except those on arms and ammunition, liquors and opium, took effect. Something of the increase now noted has no doubt to be allowed to the recent rising of the salt duty and the imposition of a duty on petroleum; but, putting these aside, there is a rise of 46 per cent. in the receipts from import duty on general merchandise. While, however, Calcutta is thus progressing, the coasting trade is falling seriously away. The value of merchandise imported in this way has declined 28 lakhs, notwithstanding symptoms of recovery from a disastrous year in 1885. In the coasting trade, too, the value of merchandise exported fell off last year to the extent of 71 lakhs, and of this 41 lakhs represented Indian produce. Touching the trade of Calcutta with foreign countries, it may be noted that there was a remarkable increase in the value of the total trade with the United Kingdom, the figures being the highest ever reached, and showing an increase of 309 lakhs, or 8 per cent. over those of the year previous. The value of the total trade between Calcutta and the United Kingdom was 36 crores five years ago, and is now over 41½ crores.

GOVERNMENT LITIGATION IN BENGAL.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

There was a very considerable decrease in the civil litigation in which the Bengal Government was concerned last year as compared with the two years preceding it. The number of cases to which the Government was a party in 1886 was 1,051, and 685 in 1887; while in 1888 the number was only 550, or nearly fifty per cent. less than in 1886. The explanation of the decrease given by Mr. T. T. Allen, the Legal Remembrancer, who has drawn up the report, would seem to be that since 1886 cases under the Land Acquisition Act have fallen off, not that the Government has been less involved in litigation. The litigation in connection with Wards' estates is a separate matter, and here, too, we find a considerable decrease in 1888 as compared with 1886; for while in the latter year the number of cases litigated was 1,435, in the former it was but 971. One case is mentioned, as to the issue of which we shall be somewhat curious. The Government Pleader joined other pleaders of the Midnapore Bar in lending Rs. 20,000 to the Rani Anandmoyi Debi, the adopted mother of the minor of the Basudepore Estate, taking as security a mortgage on her property, and exacting 18 per cent. interest at compound interest, with half-yearly rests. The loan was not paid up, and the plaintiffs now sue for Rs. 58,652, with compound interest. The defence is that the terms are extortionate, but it failed in the Lower Court, where a full decree was given. An appeal is now before the High Court, and meantime we may wonder whether the High Court will agree with the Lower Court or not. The Legal Remembrancer, by the way, does not seem very successful in realising his decrees. In 1888 the sum under realisation for Ward's decrees was nearly 14 lakhs, but of this little more than 2½ lakhs were recovered. Interest on the amount outstanding will soon mount up to a tidy sum. From one estate nearly Rs. 80,000 were legally due, but only Rs. 174 were recovered.

THE MEMBER FOR INDIA.

(Bengal Times.)

As to all India being cast down at Mr. Bradlaugh's illness, of course that is a purely childish exaggeration echoed by every Native-edited journal for consistency's sake, but without a particle of genuine feeling. Native editors know each other for what they are, and play out their farce with a considerable amount of talent in mimicry and in admirable discipline to a self-acquired pliability of habit evolving dramatic effect. To them "all the world's a stage," and it is one composed, not as Carlyle has said, mostly of fools, but—of clowns, of jesters, of posture-makers, not an actor upon it being true to nature, moved by sincerity of conviction, or real love of country and zeal for philanthropic progress, save and expect only as far as their own pockets are touched. They are just as well aware as we are, that not a soul among them would care a pin's point if Mr. Bradlaugh were to die while yet their eulogistic ink was wet. He has posed as "member for India," and a nice exhibition he has made of his ignorance and bravado! But he has fooled Natives into a belief that they have a cause, and has, as they allege, persuaded them that he is their advocate and a champion of their rights, though in what those rights consist—seeing they owe their emancipation from serfdom under a Muhammadan dynasty to British toleration—neither Bengalee patriots nor paid buffoons like Messrs. Digby and Bradlaugh have been able to define. We found Hindoos slaves we have freed, fed, clothed, educated, advanced and protected them, and our return is a threat of "organised insurrection and military revolt" if we do not concede to them all they may please to demand, any vagary to which they may give utterance in this direction becoming prescriptively a right. And in this folly and infatuation, these poor deluded men are encouraged by paid agents and sycophants ready to flatter and amuse them, to employ persuasive or vituperative language against Government and its trusted officers, and to direct their invectives, poisoned by slanderous printer's ink to Parliament praying for redress of grievances that never existed and for a recognition of rights, postulated by an excitable faculty for mental perspective and a considerable share of talent for oriental metaphor. Mr. Bradlaugh and his confrères have excited disaffection in their clients towards their best and most generous friends, patrons and rulers, and having done this, must vary their show or close business. They forget that in practical politics there is very little scenic effect possible, and that sensible people have an awkward knack of reverting to a drop-scene when hyperbole is too often or too offensively obtruded and fact forgotten.

THE MYSORE GOLD FIELD.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Facing the Gandasi traveller's bungalow, and just across the public road from Artikeri to Seringapatam, says a writer in the Madras Times, is a low range of hills covered with scrub jungle and tall grass. The prospect is not at all inviting; the absence of cultivation, the want of villages, and the low background give the place a dreary, lonely look, so that the traveller seldom glances there a second time, wasting not a thought on a spot which leaves no impression on his mind. So much for Gandasi of the past. What the future of Gandasi will be is yet to be written; a magician has struck the ground with his wand; we await the result. Mr. Bruce Foote, Superintendent of the Geological Survey of India, one of the most cautious of cautious men, a scientist of repute, and as an authority on gold-mining, pronounced to be the first in India, has laid it down that, so far as Mysore is concerned, the gold-mining operations at present conducted are the merest scratchings at the surface of an outlying patch. The great mass of the Dharwar rocks—the "Silurians" in a gold-mining sense of India—is as yet untouched. Stretching across the Mysore provinces from north to south are great bands of these Dharwars, or gold-bearing rocks, which a cursory inspection has shown to be studded with remains of an old industry, as old perhaps as the "Kurambers"—that race of able miners and artificers, of whose handiwork only glimpses are left us, in the architectural remains at Mahavalipuram. Whether carried on by Kurambars, or others, there cannot be a doubt that the plateau of South India was once the scene of a mighty gold-industry. It is not in one particular locality, or on any small scale, that these workings are carried out, but all over the area examined by Mr. Bruce Foote, numbering some thousands of square miles, shafts and tunnels are found, some filled in, others more favourably situated, partially preserved. Although these old workings have not a history, they are known to tradition, and some idea of their magnitude may be formed from the fact that all traces of cities known to have flourished some three or four hundred years ago are lost; yet the mines remain, and are easily recognised by the expert. When the present gold-mining industry in South India comes to make a history for itself, and when that history is written, the "Dharwar rocks" will hold as prominent a place as the Upper and Lower Silurian rocks of other gold-mining countries. Sufficient evidence is not as yet forthcoming to co-relate this formation with the gold-bearing rocks of Australia or America; the singular absence of paleozoic remains in rocks of this character in India precludes any comparison with the graptolitic slates of the Australian gold-fields, but the characteristics of the Dharwars are sufficiently distinctive, and this distinction marks it as the great gold-bearing rock of India.

Kolar— Mr. Bruce Foote has said—does not belong to the well-marked great bands of Dharwars, which traverse Mysore from a S. to N. direction; it is an outlier of limited extent, which may be found to form the Southern extension of a land of similar rocks, observed in Bellary and the Nizam's dominions. Of the three lands traversing Mysore, the Western is the largest in size, and the least known, the most of the country being covered with the dense forests and steep hills of the Western Ghauts. On its South-eastern fringe, and within a few miles of the Artikeri station on the Southern Mahratta Railway, is the Gandasi gold-field.

A run of a hundred miles from Bangalore, on the Tumkur Branch of the Southern Mahratta Railway brings us to Artikeri, where a first-class traveller's bungalow affords shelter, and food if required, while arrangements are being made to engage a cart to convey one to Gandasi, eleven miles south, on the Seringapatam road. On our way we pass the camp of the Haruhalli Gold Mining Company, whose courteous Resident Director is willing to show the visitor what there is to be seen on this company's property. Continuing the journey till the eleventh mile, the third class bungalow and little village of Gandasi are reached, where we camp for the night, after partaking of such provisions as we have taken care to bring with us, Gandasi producing nothing fit for European lips. Crossing the public road next morning, a walk of half-an-hour brings us to the "Ribblesdale block"—so called from the concessionaire, Lord Ribblesdale. However dreary Gandasi may be at present, it must have, at one time, presented a particularly busy appearance, as an enormous old working, said to be 700 yards in length, testifies to the amount of work carried on by the ancients. A well-marked reef, of a bluish black quartz, out-crops in the southern extremity of the working, which is semicircular in shape and of no great present depth, whatever it may have been formerly. In the old workings, Bruce Foote found gold, and Lavelle found gold; but Bruce Foote may pipe and Lavelle may pipe, the British investing public was not to be charmed—the piping of the head necromancer was wanting.

A million sterling had been spent on the Kolar gold-fields, and success had not attended the effort of a single company. Mining Captains had come, and mining Captains had gone, yet the treasures of the Champion lode were not discovered till Plummer put his hand to the Mysore plough, and since his advent success has been assured, to his field, at least. Five thousand ounces of gold a month is a rare tune with which to charm the hearts of the money-loving British investor, and Plummer had piped that tune and carried the English stock exchange with him. The stockbrokers are ready to swear by Plummer, and the curates and widows of old England are ready to believe the brokers, and bring forth their little savings, if Plummer reports on Gandasi. The Directors of the Mysore Gold Mining Company instruct Captain Plummer to proceed to Gandasi and report on Ribblesdale's Block. Plummer demurs; he is old, and roughing it in strange localities has no charms for him. The Directors insist, no report but Plummer's will go down with the public. Plummer must oblige, and except £500 for his week's work.

Captain Plummer, Manager of the Mysore Gold Mining Company, proceeded to Artikeri in the early part of September, to report on the Gandasi gold-field. After a careful survey of the field and its mineral characteristics, after numerous tests of samples of quartz, and a close scrutiny of the reefs and old workings, Mr. Plummer reports very favourably of this property; nay, rumour has it that so highly does he think of it that he will himself direct the mining operations if his health permits; and if rumour is correct, then we may believe that the Gandasi gold-field is a gold mine indeed. There can be no doubt that the British public will come forward freely to invest in a concern that has Plummer's approval, for it is argued "has he not made Mysore a success, when others failed?"

To the Mysore Government this new departure to pastures new may mean a great deal. Already, the direct revenue from the royalty on the out-turn of gold amounts to a lac of rupees per annum, while the indirect benefit to the State, from the large expenditure on labour and necessaries at the mines, must be great. With the opening out of a new gold-field in the heart of Mysore, a fillip would be given to all other sources of revenue, as increased wealth means increased wants, with the means of gratifying them.

THE CHEAP PASSAGE MOVEMENT.

(Statesman.)

It will be remembered that some ago the steamship companies trading to the East formed a combination for the purpose of increasing freights, which proved successful, notwithstanding the opposition of a not uninfluential line of steamers. The combination began in China, and gradually spread to all the ports in the East. This increase in freights on goods was soon followed by a similiar combination in respect of passage rates—at the expense of the public. It is perhaps only natural, therefore, that the public should in turn seek to avail themselves of this principle of combination, or unionism, to enforce a reduction of the passage freights. It is notorious that the high rates of passage money charged between England and India often entail great hardship on worthy servants of the Crown and the Anglo-Indian public, absolutely prohibiting some, especially those with large families, from taking the necessary holiday home, while, in the case of others, putting them to an expense which they can ill afford. It may be said that the P. and O. Company have good and cheap second-class accommodation, but it is urged that, in this country, the social status of a large number of Europeans is "pretty universally equal," and therefore it is difficult for them to sink their social rank and travel with Europeans and Native servants, simply because their incomes happen to be small. Whether or not this is a creditable feeling on the part of those with small incomes we shall not now stop to inquire. We are certainly of opinion that the present passage rates are capable of considerable reduction, both as regards first and second-class berths, and on that ground alone we heartily sympathise with the movement that has been set on foot to bring about a reduction in the high rates at present charged. Indeed, the excessive cost of a passage home and back is a long-standing grievance, and it has been greatly intensified by the combination already referred to among the steamship companies not to reduce their rates below a certain fixed amount, thus putting an end to all fair competition. It could scarcely have been expected by those who entered into this union that no effort would be made to break it up, and we are therefore not surprised to learn, from a circular which has been forwarded to us, that about two years ago several gentlemen resolved to combine together with the object of enforcing on the steamship companies a reduction of their rates. These gentlemen have formed themselves into an Association, called "The Anglo-Indian Passage Association," whose object it is to support any steamship company that will contract to give them passages home and out again at a a reasonable and moderate rate. About 800 members, we learn, have already joined the Association, which, practically, amounts to 1,200 when their wives and children are included. But this number is obviously insufficient to ensure success, and the promoters appeal to "all Europeans who do not come out to India as a permanency" to join in increasing numbers. As the movement must necessarily interest a large number of our readers we publish below the lines upon which the Association proposes to work. The promoters aim at getting large steamers with a fairly high rate of speed, good accommodation, and good food, and they will, besides, stipulate for the following as essential requirements:—

Digitized by Google

First.—Fortnightly, and preferably weekly departures.

Second.—Starting point in India to be Bombay; to call at Marseilles, preferably also at Brindisi or Malta. Port of arrival to be London, Southampton, or Liverpool.

Third.—Overcrowding in cabins to be avoided and cabins to be specially ventilated; also the comfort of passengers to be studied as much as possible.

Fourth.—Only first-class passengers and their servants to be conveyed.

Fifth.—A surgeon and sufficient stewards and stewardesses to be carried; also boats to be proportionate to the number of passengers.

If all these requirements can be obtained the promoters will have good cause to congratulate themselves; but experience will show how far these conditions will have to be modified. For instance, the steamship companies may decline to accept an unlimited number of members and their families, as they might desire to reserve a few berths on each voyage, especially from England to India, for letting out at the usual fares. But, however that may be, it is satisfactory to learn that one line of steamers has already offered a reduction of 20 per cent. on their advertised fares, and negotiations are being carried on with two other large and powerful steamship companies, which, if successful, ought to bring about a complete revolution in the rates and conditions of the passenger traffic between England and India. It is pointed out in the circular under review that by joining the Association at once, no person runs any risk, nor is he bound to do anything but that, when a fair offer has been made by a steamer company, it will be circulated to all the members for final acceptance, and, if any member does not approve the terms, he can withdraw his name from the Association. In order to cover the cost of printing, circulating, postage, &c., each member, on joining, must pay the small sum of one rupee as registration-fee; and, as no steamship company is likely to come to any agreement with the Association without a guarantee that the members will travel by its steamers alone, and by no other, each member who has accepted the terms arranged will have to sign an agreement to that effect, and deposit as earnest money the sum of Rs. 100, which will be placed to his credit at a Government Bank, this sum to be forfeited to the steam liner if he breaks his word; but, in the event of his death, the deposit will be refunded to his heirs or executors. Any further information on the subject will be supplied, we are told, on application to Messrs. William Watson and Co., of Bombay. The objects of the Association certainly have our sympathy, and we wish it all success.

THE RISE AND FALL OF THE KALA JUGGAH.

(Pioneer.)

There where the world was quiet,
There where no dancers meet,
Far from the wilful riot,
The rhythm and fall of feet,
In early days our mothers,
Our sisters and our brothers
Had made a snug retreat.

They called it "Kala Juggah,"
And worshipped at its shrine,
As a Hindu might a mugger—
(This only for the rhyme).
They placed in it a lantern,
And ferns and leaves of plantain,
With chairs and curtains fine.

Here Ethel came with Walter,
And there they sat them both,
As with accents which would falter
He plighted her his troth.
From that time to the present
The maiden and the peasant
To leave it have been loth.

'Twas found at all our dances
In many a leafy dell.
For solitude entrances
The witch'ry of its spell.
And chaperons and brothers
And calculating mothers
Had learned to love it well!

But then it lost its meaning,
And mothers looked askance
If daughters showed a leaning
Towards it at a dance.
For now no lantern's glimmer
On silks and fern-leaves shimmer
Within its dim expanse.

Our captains now affect it,
And widows out at grass
Who by their arts have wrecked
For every other class.
For here the matron frisky
Tells stories that are risky:
And so the hours pass.

It thus became a scandal
From Murree to Shillong,
'Twas known to folk and vandal
And ridiculed in song.
So now these dim recesses
Are only found at messes
In Burma and Hong Kong.

FURLOUGH ALLOWANCES AND PENSIONS.

(Indian Engineer.)

The undeniable grievances of uncovenanted members of the Department of Public Works in the matter of furlough allowances and pensions have long enlisted our sympathy, and it seems superfluous to allude to the various occasions upon which we have endeavoured to represent to the Government of India how real these grievances are, the discontent which they undoubtedly and very naturally provoke, and the loss of efficiency thereby occasioned to the State in the service of the individuals concerned. It is hardly credible that a sane Government should voluntarily deprive itself of the best services of a large body of public servants in whose hands rests, it should with due weight be remembered, the administration of the most expensive department of the State by imposing such hardships as at present exist. We would fain believe that the present grievances result from a general desire on the part of the Government of India to curtail expenditure on account of the heavy loss it now sustains owing to the unprecedented fall in exchange. If this be the reason, we will endeavour to show that, however laudable may be its general application in matters of expenditure, it cannot be justly held to apply to the prospects of public servants upon whose exertions the welfare of a large spending Department depends.

TIRESOME MAMLUTDARS.

(Times of India.)

A printed document, addressed to all Bombay Civilians of over ten years' standing, urging them to memorialise the Secretary of State on behalf of the peccant Mamlutdars, is now being circulated. It is difficult to imagine that any Civilian, not of ten years', but of six months' standing, would be guilty of so incredible an act of folly. The Secretary of State has ordered certain men to be dismissed from the service. Regarding these men, a member of the Supreme Government and the highest Council of the State, Mr. Hutchins, said:—"Every one of these men has confessed to the commission of a criminal offence. Even those whose payments do not clearly come within the purview of the statute are undoubtedly guilty under the Indian Penal Code, which they were pledged to administer righteously and effectually. The mere payment of the illegal gratification affords ample justification for their dismissal from the public service: it is only out of grace and policy and our wish to fulfil, as far as possible, even an illegal promise, that any one of them can be retained." The members of the Bombay Civil Service, a service which has had for the past century a splendid reputation for a keen sense of honour and a spotless integrity, are asked to memorialise the Secretary of State on behalf of these men.

"COUNTING THE COST."

(Madras Times.)

"A Member of the late Congress" writes to us:—

It is not very easy to reply to your appeal to the Congress party, as that is an undefined body, which seems to vary to suit the line of argument. If, however, by the phrase you permit me to indicate that large number of persons, probably the majority, who, having been members of past Congresses and continuing to take an active interest in its work, decline to be responsible for the acts or words of any authorised person or persons who chose to pose, as representatives of the Congress, then it is possible to explain what one would have thought was a very simple matter.

With reference indeed to the first statements in your article, headed "Counting the Cost," I am unable to say anything, as I have not seen the telegrams referred to; and, though I know the affairs of the Congress pretty well, have heard nothing about them. With reference, however, to Mr. Hume and the English Agency, I am able to say something. Your article is apparently based on a telegraphic despatch stating what the Morning Post says Mr. Hume has written. I should have thought that your journalistic experience would have made you suspect that a telegraphic rumour of this kind, even if vouched for by so high an authority as the Morning Post, might possibly not mean so much as appears on the outside.

As a matter of fact, the English Agency is a purely private concern, and has never even been mentioned in the Congress; and there has always been considerable difference of opinion on the subject. Some committees agreed to contribute, and did so. Others sent any money members chose to contribute, while not, as a body, agreeing to send anything. Others refused. Bombay says it never undertook to send, though undoubtedly Mr. Hume understood that it would. Mr. Hume was over-sanguine, and advanced money out of his own pocket, in hopes that it would be collected subsequently. Undoubtedly he has been badly treated, not, however, by the Congress, but by those who started the agency and prompted the incurring of expenditure which they have been unable to find the money to defray.

I fear that the subscriptions for 1889 will show an equal deficit.

You will now ask why? You have suggested one reason; may I suggest another,—reasons which I know to have weighed with some, and believe to have weighed with many. Is it not possible that many may like to have some guarantee as to the way in which their subscriptions are to be applied? May it not be imagined that at least some members of the Congress decline to be personally represented by Mr. Digby? Is it so very certain that the Bradlaugh business is not looked upon with doubt and suspicion in some quarters? That such questions admit of more than one answer is a fact that may profitably be pondered by those ready to see evil in the Congress on any pretext, however weak.

That an English Agency would be important and valuable all admit; that the Agency as at present constituted would ever receive satisfactory support is extremely unlikely. You will note that even the Morning Post telegram says not "the Agency" but "an Agency," and the proposals to be brought before the Congress contemplate something very different from what now exists. If an Agency be constituted on an approved basis, there will not probably be any difficulty in securing the money to pay for it.

"We are afraid the days of the Indian National Congress are numbered. The secretary, Mr. A. O. Hume, is getting tired of it. He has, we hear, written to the Standing Committees pointing out that he personally paid nearly Rs. 10,000 towards last year's expenses owing to the Poona Committee having failed, and the Bombay Committee having 'definitely refused to pay their contributions.' And Mr. Hume, whose devotion to the movement will ever be a monument to his memory, after saying that if Indians do not support the English organisation he must wash his hands of the matter, writes:—'If all these good and worthy men cannot so combine as to effect the raising, yearly, promptly, and without my having to dun you for every rupee, of the paltry sum of thirty thousand or forty thousand rupees, required for that primary essential, the English Agency, then it simply means that you and I have been wrong, and our opponents, who declare us unfit for self-government, right, and the sooner I give up the vain attempts of making ropes of what I have hitherto believed to be good fibre, but which, tried by the money test, seems threatening to turn out something very like sand, the better it will be for all of us. If therefore the English expenses of 1890 are not guaranteed at the Bombay meeting, Mr. Hume will retire, and the Congress will be heard of no more."

It will be seen that the reference is to "the English Agency," which, as we understand it, embraces the present management, viz., that of Mr. Digby. Our correspondent throws some side lights upon the Congress question, and seems to suggest that considerable differences of opinion have arisen among the members of the "undefined party," and it seems to us that his words reflect a still more pronounced disbelief than we entertain in the Congress "as it is."—Ed. M. T.]

BENGAL.

(Nov. 13.)

THIS morning the transport s.s. Bhundara left for Chittagong, carrying for the Chin-Lushai Expedition the following officers and troops:—510 transport coolies, 192 mules with muleteers, and 150 sepoys of the 9th Bengal Infantry, with three officers, nine warrant and eight non-commissioned officers, and nine field hospital assistants. Captain Davidson goes in charge of the transports.

THE detachments and units of the Telegraph Survey and Army Signalling comprises as follows:—Captain Brown and Lieutenant Birkhick, Superintendent and Assistant-Superintendent Army Signalling, with 44 European and Native non-commissioned officers and men.

A DETACHMENT of the Telegraph Department will comprise six British non-commissioned officers and men. The officers accompanying are:—Major Leach, Captain Mullaly, and Lieutenant Peters, with eight overseers, and Captain Chambers, of the Intelligence Department.

SURGEON-MAJOR MURPHY, Principal Medical Officer, Commissariat Department, furnishes two commissioned and nine warrant officers, with eight to nine hundred followers, and a cargo of medical and commissariat stores.

SHOULD the s.s. Bhundara return in time she will again leave on the same service, on the 22nd inst., together with the steamers Dalhousie and Clive, conveying the 2nd Goorkhas, numbering two companies of Sappers and Miners, and the 2nd Battalion 4th Goorkhas, 1,000 muleteers, and 500 transport coolies, and commissariat supplies.

A PUBLIC meeting in connection with arrangements for Prince Albert Victor's visit to Calcutta is to be held on the 6th December. The Lieutenant-Governor will preside, and an influential committee will be appointed to invite subscriptions. There is a strong feeling in favour of a permanent memorial of the visit, in the shape of a leper asylum.

THE week's weather and crops report states:—No rain; fine weather prevalent throughout the week. Winter rice is generally a promising crop, but in a few districts the average outturn will be rather short on account of deficient rainfall, and in places in Behar there will be some loss on the high lands owing to the failure of the hathiya or closing rains. All cold weather crops, including poppy and tobacco, are being sown, and sowings are germinating well. In Mozufferpore the poppy sowings are suffering from want of moisture. In Rajshahye ganja is being cultivated, and the weather is favourable. Sugarcane is reported to be a good crop in almost all districts. Prices of rice are almost stationary, but a slight decline has been reported from some districts. In Behar the scarcity is said to be practically at an end. In the affected districts harvest prospects are satisfactory, ample labour is obtainable everywhere in the fields, markets are fully supplied with food, and prices are falling. Relief works and gratuitous relief are almost all closed. During the fortnight ending 31st October the daily average number of persons relieved gratuitously was 1,944 in Mozufferpore and 199 in Champarun, against 6,634 and 344 respectively, in the preceding fortnight. In Mozufferpore the daily average number on relief works during the same fortnight was 2,700, against 2,765 in the preceding fortnight.

MADRAS.

(Nov. 13.)

AT a meeting of the Legislative Council the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to the Salt Revenue in the Madras Presidency was passed after several amendments, as was also the Towns Nuisances Bill. The Bill for levying tobacco duties in Madras city was referred to a Select Committee.

UPWARDS of twenty Wesleyan missionaries of Southern India met in conference at Bangalore to consider the interests of missions in India. Representatives were also present from Calcutta, Lucknow, Benares, and Burma. At the first meeting a vigorous debate took place on the recent controversy raised by the article in the Methodist Times on Missions.

COLONEL HALEMAN, Madras Staff Corps, Paymaster of the Pensioners in the Secunderabad District, while dancing with his niece at the "At Home" given by the 5th Madras Infantry, on Nov. 6th, suddenly fell down and expired almost immediately. Death was due to apoplexy, and the party of course broke up at once. Colonel Haleman was buried the following day with full military honours.

(Nov 15.)

ARRIVAL OF PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR.

Bombay was never put into such a state of commotion before by the appearance of any great personage in its midst as the city was on Saturday, by the sudden arrival of his Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor of Wales. Everybody knows how it was first announced the P. and O. steamer Oceana, with her Royal passenger, would in all probability reach Bombay about noon. Then it was considered no more inconvenient time could be fixed for the landing of his Royal Highness than under the heat of a noon-day sun, and a telegram was despatched to Suez, requesting the captain of the ship that he might, if possible, put on all steam and try to reach Bombay in the morning not later than eight o'clock. Arrangements were made accordingly; the military and the Volunteers were ordered to be out in the early morning to parade on the Apollo Bunder and line the streets by eight o'clock, and the tickets issued to those who were to take part in the reception at the Bunder distinctly said eight A.M. Then came the telegram from Aden, which stated that the Oceana had arrived there at eight P.M. on Monday night, and left at nine P.M., and so could not reach Bombay harbour much before two o'clock on Saturday afternoon. Thus the arrangements for the morning reception were all upset, and a new programme had to be made out, or rather the hours had all to be altered. Four o'clock was fixed for the hour of landing. When Captain Tomlin, of the Oceana, was told what was expected of him, or of his good ship rather, that she was wanted to reach Bombay by eight o'clock on Saturday morning, he shook his head. He would try, but he could not guarantee reaching Bombay before two o'clock in the afternoon. Hence the news was wired hither, which was the cause of so much confusion on Saturday morning.

There was a general rush for the Apollo Bunder, which was soon crowded. The Oceana was more than sighted. There lay the big ship at eight o'clock; her masts glistening in the morning sun, and covered from stem to stern with bright pennons, resting already at anchor, her bows pointed towards the shore. Then came a scramble. Sepoys were sent for reinforcements of Sepoys, who in turn were despatched in all directions to find those in authority, while the workmen almost tumbled over each other in their haste to get the Bunder steps laid with crimson carpeting. And where was the flagship Boadicea, which was to fire the salute to his Royal Highness on the s.s. Oceana reaching the harbour? She was expected on Thursday, but had not yet arrived, nor were there any signs of her on the horizon. H.M.S. Garnet, however, discharged the Boadicea's duties. The tars hurried up the masts and manned the yards; streamers were run up from stem to stern, while her guns boomed a welcome. The people residing in Parel, Dadur, Sion, Mahim, Bandora, and all the outlying districts were less fortunate than those in Bombay. Unaware of the Oceana's sudden arrival, they came into the city by gharry and car about two in the afternoon, and were very much disgusted to find that the Prince had not only arrived, but departed for Poona. It was still more annoying for those who had travelled long distances by rail, and did not arrive in the city till all was over.

Meanwhile all was excitement on the Oceana. When the news was conveyed on board that all was not in readiness on shore for his Royal Highness's landing, that the ship had not been expected till afternoon, and that arrangements had been made for his coming ashore at four in the afternoon, great surprise was expressed. Captain Tomlin had been asked to try and bring his ship into port by eight in the morning. He had not been very sure about it; but he had done it, beating all former records of sailings between Aden and Bombay by fully an hour. In the month of October, 1887, the P. and O. s.s. Victoria ran from Aden to Bombay in four days, eleven hours and thirty-eight minutes. That remained the record till Saturday morning, when it was found the Oceana had accomplished the run in four days, ten and a-half hours. The question now was, what was to be done. It would have been going a little too far to have expected the Prince to remain on board all day till late in the afternoon, especially as he had appeared on deck in the uniform of an officer of the 10th Hussars. But the news was brought on board that preparations were being pushed forward with all speed for his immediate reception. Everybody knows the confusion, the hurry, the bustle, the noise there are on board a ship reaching a port after a long voyage. Everybody is anxious to set foot once more on land. But on Saturday morning the bustle beggared all description. The ship was full of passengers, there being in all 294 on board, and all or nearly all were in a state of the most intense excitement to get on shore in time to see the Prince land. But they need not have hurried so much. The Prince did not go ashore immediately. He was ready when those on shore were ready to receive him; but he moved about in the best of spirits, chatting with Lord and Lady Claude Hamilton, and bidding good-bye to the ladies and gentlemen who had been of his party during the voyage; or holding converse with the gentlemen of his suite, Captain Holford, of the 1st Life Guards, and Captain Harvey, of the 10th Hussars. Meanwhile General Sir Edward Bradford, who accompanied his Royal Highness's father the Prince of Wales on his Indian tour of 1875-76, and who is now performing the same duties for the young Prince, hurried about, the busiest of the busy, personally superintending the arrangements for Prince Albert Victor's departure for the shore. Time passed; the Prince and his party partook of breakfast comfortably; and then shortly before eleven o'clock a large steam-launch was seen to put off from shore showing the Royal ensign. The boat made fast alongside, and H.E. the Governor and H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by their staffs, stepped on board. His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor received Lord Reay and the Duke at the top of the ladder; and after cordially greeting both, the Prince retired with his uncle to his private room on the hurricane deck, where they engaged in a short conversation together. They presently returned, however, and stood talking with Lord Reay, Lord and Lady Claude Hamilton, till, all arrangements complete, they prepared to set off for shore. The harbour now presented a beautiful spectacle. All the ships at anchor were clad in a mass of fluttering colour, the decorations on the Bunder and the Yacht Club looked even prettier than they did on shore, while a dark line along the Bunder walls showed that, whoever they were, a considerable crowd had assembled to give welcome to the Prince. On the launch steaming off from the Oceana's side, the Garnet, whose rigging was still full of blue-jackets, fired another welcome from guns alternately on the larboard and starboard sides, the blue smoke slowly moving over the water and hiding the shore in a mist, into which the launch bearing the Prince disappeared; but presently thirty-one guns, fired from the battery, told that his Royal Highness had reached shore, and had been received by a people who had looked forward to his coming with eager longing, and whose whole talk for months past had been almost solely of Prince Albert Victor of Wales.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN BOMBAY.

On the night of Nov. 12th an extensive fire broke out in Apollo-street, one of the busiest thoroughfares in the Fort. It began in a four-storied house, the property of a retired Parsee merchant. The fire originated on the ground-floor, which was a shop rented by Messrs. Mody and Company, ship chandlers and general mill suppliers. The goods in the shop consisted of oils, paints and tallow. The fire in a very short time had firm hold of the shop and raged fiercely, spreading to the second floor, occupied by Messrs. Schiller, Dosogne and Company. It mounted to the third floor, occupied by Joseph Soares, and then to the fourth, where resided Sergeant Sanderland, of the Ordnance Department. In about an hour the house was gutted. At half-past twelve the flames, fanned by the breeze, spread to the building on the right-hand side, wherein were the offices of Messrs. Hore, Conroy and Brown, solicitors. The whole of these offices were destroyed. The same fate befell the office of Mr. Gostling, architect. The first floor of this building was occupied by Cowasji Brothers, merchants; Batha and Co., merchants and liquidators of the Nursoe Kessowjee Mills and the Alexandra Mills; the ground-floor by Messrs. Mody and Co.; Jussawalla and Co., general merchants; Writer and Co., general merchants; Rustomji, Sorabjee and Co., ship chandlers and mill suppliers. Further on were the premises of the Caxton Printing Works, owned by Messrs. Claridge and Co., from whence the English Mail is issued.

About one o'clock the fire spread to the top floor of a range of buildings on the left-hand side. A number of Armenian families occupying the top floor of the offices of Messrs. Hore, Conroy and Brown were saved from certain death by Instructor Dollin, of the Bombay Volunteer Rifles, and Sergeant Staite, of the 2nd Gloucestershire regiment. Sailors from Government vessels and soldiers were conspicuous when the fire was in progress, trying to save property. One sailor met with an accident while trying to work the hose from the roof of the building opposite the Medical Stores. He fell from the roof to the road, and was removed to the hospital, where it was found that he had sustained serious injuries. By three o'clock another building, excepting the basement, was gutted, and roof and top floor of still another were consumed. The walls of the shop in which the fire originated fell with a loud crash, carrying with them the walls of the adjoining buildings. William Watson's premises were only just saved, a narrow street running between them and the burning buildings. The fire was still burning at daylight, but was under control.

ELEPHANT-CATCHING AT MYSORE.

There is more than one gentleman in this country who witnessed, in 1876, the successful effort made by Mr. Sanderson, then attached to the Survey Department of Mysore, to entice some eighty wild elephants into a stockade. Those gentlemen will bear witness to the extreme skill, gallantry, and fearlessness displayed by Mr. Sanderson on that occasion. An account of the whole business is to be found in one of the most fascinating books of sport ever written, entitled "Thirteen Years with the Wild Beasts of Mysore." The catch and the mode in which it was recorded were fortunate circumstances for Mr. Sanderson, for when a vacancy occurred in the elephant-catching department at Dacca, the Government of India transferred that gentleman, on a large salary, to that post. There Mr. Sanderson increased his reputation in the same field, catching more than a hundred elephants each season. After a service there of some twelve years Mr. Sanderson, having qualified for a pension, resigned his appointment under the Government, and, returning to his old love, accepted office under the Maharajah of Mysore, as elephant-catcher to that State. Whether, at the same time, his Highness bestowed upon Mr. Sanderson the local rank of colonel, which the telegraphic despatches from India bestow upon him, we have no means of knowing, but if he did, the title is every bit as valid as that of colonel in the Turkish army flaunted by many Englishmen in London. It would seem that the Maharajah was desirous of taking advantage of the visit of Prince Albert Victor to his territories to treat him to a spectacle of all others the most exciting, and one demanding the special exercise of nerve and coolness. Mr. Sanderson accordingly received his instructions, and, it would appear from the telegrams, carried them out with his wonted success. He induced some sixty wild elephants to enter the stockade he had thrown up; he then let down the portcullis; then entering with his trained assistants and the visitors, all mounted on elephants, he proceeded to hobble the captives. That was the exciting time. The wild elephants completely terrorised are no match for the cool and practised skill of the humans. The latter, on the ground in a second, are seen diving under the legs of the wild animals, hobbling them, or securing them by some means, and rendering them incapable of doing injury. In this they are greatly assisted by the tame elephants, all of whom had probably undergone the same process, but now rejoice at having the chance of bringing their whilom associates into a similar position. When all the elephants have been secured they generally lapse into a state of resignation, and it is considered safe for the visitors to walk about. But it occasionally happens that one or two of the animals are not to be comforted. We recollect that on the occasion of the capture in 1876 one of these broke loose and charged Mr. Sanderson himself. His life depended upon the directness of the aim of the large-bore gun he held in his hand. He had to use it or be killed. With the coolness natural to him, he fired and dropped the animal within five yards of him. It was the only blood taken on the occasion. It would seem that even in the matter of catching elephants history delights to repeat itself. Thursday's telegram informs us that after the battle was over, and the elephants had been hobbled, and the visitors were walking about inspecting the captives, one of the animals broke loose and charged Prince Albert Victor. It would seem that it would have gone hard with the Prince but for the interposition of Mr. Sanderson, whose unerring gun probably repeated its exploit of twelve years before. All is well that ends well, but there are risks to which we think that it is not advisable that the eldest son of the Prince of Wales should be exposed to, and this is one of them. It is not always that a Mr. Sanderson is handy.—Evening Post.

SAD OCCURRENCE AT KARACHI.

The Karachi correspondent of the Lahore paper says, that on Nov. 8, a dog belonging to Mr. Parfit, one of the partners of the firm of Alex. McHinch and Co., was noticed to be looking very "queer," its mouth dropping foam, and its respiration seeming to be laboured. The dog was behaving calmly, however, and nothing was done. On Sunday Mr. Parfit received a communication requiring instant attention, and started rather hastily from his seat. His dog, which had been sitting quietly beside him, sprang at its master, and bit him once through two garments, so as to severely pinch the flesh, and to cause a drop or two of blood to flow. Very soon after the animal found its way to a bed-room where a young child lay sleeping; and, springing upon the bed, the dog bit the child several times on the neck and cheek and shoulder. It then disappeared, and when next seen it was attacking a dog in the compound of Mr. G. Lambert, where it was fired at. Thence it went for some dogs on Mr. Rodoconachy's premises; and when it dashed over a lap-dog at the Ladies' Club, it was covered with blood. One of the chokras who tried to remove the animal was also bitten. The dog was ultimately shot; but nobody appears to be certain as to what animals it has actually bitten. The owner of the dog is believed to have received advice to place himself under M. Pasteur's treatment without delay.

THE INDIAN TRADE.

A monopoly, which at present is virtally in the hands of the British steamship owners, is threatened to be interfered with. We refer to the carrying trade with India, which for the past thirty years has been almost entirely in our hands. The leading shipowners at Marseilles propose to establish a line of steamers from that port to Bombay and Calcutta, the French flag being at present only carried by the Messageries Company, and their vessels carry less than 1 per cent. of the cargo outwards and homewards to India, which amounts to over 500,000 tons annually. The Messageries Company will not look upon any new company starting as a menace to the prosperity which they have so long enjoyed, as they have their regular subsidy for the French Royal Mails and take their pick of the best of the cargo available for Indian ports. It is considered probable that a new company will merely make a bold bid to procure some portion of the 500,000 tons of freight which is at present carried by British and a few German vessels. It is a matter of surprise that with a port as many days nearer to India as Marseilles is, the French steamship owners have so long closed their eyes to the fact that the commercial importance of their town might be vastly enhanced by placing a new fleet on the Indian service, and that for years past they have allowed business to slip through their fingers which has been found more profitable than any other we can think of from a shipping point of view. There is no need to place such vessels as the Messageries' liners in the new fleet; but such boats as the British India and Ducal liners, with large capacity for cargo, will no doubt be found a most remunerative experiment, and after a few months a weekly service might almost be attempted.—Citizen.

We have to acknowledge the receipt of an admirable sheet in the shape of the Law Almanac for 1890—its fifty-ninth year of publication, but its first under the present proprietorship (Messrs. T. Scott and Co., 1, Warwick-court, Holborn). It is replete with information, not only legal, but historical and chronological—the latter being a new feature introduced by the editor, Mr. Frederick Herbert, who has brought no little of the energy and ability which he showed formerly on ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL to bear upon the compilation of the Law Almanac, which enlarged, revised, and corrected up to date, will be found a most useful work of reference for library or office.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for December is a capital number. Whether there is anything new which can be said regarding the great commanders of modern times may be questioned, but there will always be, in even telling the story of their lives again, much to fascinate military readers. Mr. O'Connor Morris commences the series with an able paper on "Turenne," which the Editor prefaces with something like a plea (in which we join) for the honour of a place being first of all given to the famous Gustavus Adolphus. Admiral Colomb continues his able contributions on "Naval Warfare," and Captain Verner his useful "Notes on Military Topography." The noble art of self-defence is well explained and illustrated in the paper on "Boxing" by Messrs. Barroll and Angle; and Irving Montagu's "Wanderings of a War Artist" are always pleasant reading. The Editor gives another of his clever translations from the Swedish, and a thoughtful historical paper on "Charles XII. and Aurora Von Konigsmark" go with some lighter pabulum to make up an excellent number—interesting, instructive, and well illustrated.

STATION MESSES.

A STATEMENT having been recently made to the effect that Station Messes were to be introduced into Burma, the Times of India devotes a leader to the question of whether it would not be a good thing if the system were introduced throughout the whole Native army in India. The writer does not recommend this arrangement, but he very fairly puts the pros and cons before his readers. There is no doubt that the regimental mess system has been of unquestionable advantage to the British army in keeping up that feeling of comradeship and esprit de corps which helped to make regiments honourable rivals in gaining distinction for prowess on the battle-field, or for discipline and efficiency in quarters. A good mess was generally significant of a good regiment. In the old, much-abused purchase days, the Radical reformers insisted that the regimental mess was an aristocratic, expensive institution, where extravagance was encouraged, and through which many a poor but promising subaltern came to grief by being forced into expenses which his slender purse could not afford. This was not true; for in a well-regulated corps the mess charges were fixed at a rate which suited the pocket of the poorest, and at no place else could an officer dine so well and so cheaply as at his own mess. The cost of the dinner itself was small, and there was no pressure put upon anyone to drink expensive wines, or, indeed, any wine at all. When improvident youngsters got into debt, it was an easy but not very nice way of finding excuse for parent or guardian to say that the mess expenses caused the pecuniary trouble. The fact, however, was, that the young gentlemen who "came to grief" in the Service found other ways of getting into debt than at the mess table. For the mess—although a pleasant arrangement by which seniors and juniors met together on social equality—was in a certain sense a parade of gentlemen, at which individual excess or extravagance could not be indulged in without bringing the offender under the notice of the officer commanding or the senior officer present. This position was one tacitly acknowledged and thoroughly understood by all. The Times of India says that "of course, on big guest nights, when the table is crowded, and the youthful element predominates, the fun waxes fast and furious in the most staid mess"; but this was certainly not the case in the days we refer to. Guest nights were specially nights when a stranger could judge fairly of the character of the general body of officers who constituted his hosts by the tone of their conversation and conduct at the mess-table. We are referring to regiments of the Queen's service in England; but we are not aware of any change in manners arising from change of station or climate. The experience of our Indian contemporary must considerably differ from our own if the following statement can be authenticated :—

"There are still many officers in the service who can remember a scene that used not to be of rare occurrence at the mess of a well-known cavalry regiment. Some guest who had well dined, and who had quaffed many bumpers of good liquor, would propose to depart in the small hours of the morning. After several struggles with his too hospitable entertainers he would succeed in reaching the porch of the mess, where his tattoo would be waiting. One of his hosts would seize the bridle, while a couple more helped the departing guest into the saddle. Then a shower of blows would descend on the back of the pony, who would gallop headlong out into the darkness, all efforts of the luckless guest to pull him up being useless, for the simple reason that someone had playfully taken the precaution to cut the reins. This practical joke can hardly be called very funny, particularly for the guest on a dark night with an uncertain seat, a severed bridle, and a runaway tattoo; but no one ever seemed to be any the worse, and everybody turned up to breakfast next morning as though nothing unusual had happened."

Curious things have been done in India in the way of practical joking; but we agree with the writer from whom we quote, that the above could hardly be called "funny," and that "happily the days for these sort of rough jests are over." We did not know that they ever existed, except perhaps in some of Charles Lever's military novels. Our contemporary, however, is more at home in describing the mess of an Indian in the days of the Company, when esprit de corps flourished as strongly in India as at home :—

"In the Indian Army, as our readers are aware, the mess has always occupied a peculiarly prominent position in regimental life. In pre-Mutiny days, when as yet the railway and the mem-sahib were almost equally unknown, it was the social rallying-point of every military cantonment. Everybody breakfasted, tiffined, and dined there. Those who did not belong to the regiment were honorary members of its mess, read their papers, and played billiards there, and wagged their heads approvingly as they sipped a glass of the old Madeira, for which it was famous. If anyone passed through other stations and modestly put up in the Travellers' Bungalow he was straightway unearthed and brought over in triumph to enjoy the hospitality of the mess. It was open house in a way, and yet it was not expensive. The three meals a-day cost an officer about Rs. 60 per mensem, and if he allowed himself another Rs. 60 for his wine bill, he paid the not exorbitant sum of Rs, 120 a month for food and drink ; for in those days, when a man had a guest to dine with him, he was not ashamed to give him a bottle of beer, or, may be, two, to drink with his dinner, while after dinner the aforesaid old Madeira circulated, and thus a good deal of hospitality was exercised, and no one was much the worse for it on pay-day. The habit of drinking champagne was of a later growth, and made hospitality more expensive without making it more cordial. Of course, the fact of everybody, or practically everybody, being unmarried, was an enormous pull for the mess. From twelve to fifteen officers sat down to dinner every evening, the Major commanding—for in those days Colonels were very rare birds, indeed—sitting in state in his proper seat at the middle of the table, faced by the old Scotch doctor, who had been twenty years in the regiment, while two or three captains, a few lieutenants, and some rosy-cheeked ensigns, fresh from Addiscombe, made up the complement of dining members. With these members it was possible to keep up a capital mess, to live well but cheaply, and to maintain that spirit of hospitality for which the Indian army has always been famous."

The Mutiny first, and the introduction of the Staff Corps afterwards, gave a fatal blow to the Indian regimental messes so well and truthfully described. That old institution has gone, we fear, like the old Madeira, never to return. Station messes may be founded and prove admirable resorts where men of different corps—too few to form a mess of their own—are brought together at one place. But if regimental officers care to hold to each other they should do all in their power, however small their numbers, to hold fast also to the regimental mess system, which was once a power and is still a pleasant memory of—the past.

THE trade of the province of Sind increased last year by leaps and bounds, and Karachi shows increases both in foreign and coasting trade imports and exports. The imports from foreign countries reached the highest total ever recorded—an increase of over thirty-seven per cent. on the previous year. Coal, coke, cotton, twist and yarn, piece-goods, hardware and cutlery, iron, steel, zinc, spelter, provisions, tobacco, and raw wool each show an improvement ; dyed materials, machinery and mill work, matches, coffee, silk, piece-goods, sugar, wood, timber, and woollen manufactures, a relapse. Arms, ale, beer and porter, wines and liqueurs, oils and kerosene came in larger quantities, spirits in smaller. Trade with France, Austria, Italy, Mauritius, Arabia, and Mekran shows signs of falling off. Belgium, Egypt, Persia, and Turkey have sent out larger exports than usual. In trade with England the greater portion of Karachi's good fortune has come. The port authorities are naturally jubilant, and the Collector of Customs, proud of his head-quarters, pays the port what will be allowed to be a well-merited compliment. The harbour improvements, he says, which have made the port of Karachi accessible to vessels of any tonnage, the increased and increasing wharfage accommodation for such vessels, which are worked by all the modern means and appliances for landing and shipping cargo expeditiously, combine and secure for Karachi what naturally ought to be hers, viz., all the direct trade for Northern India. Formerly, as the Collector says, much of this trade went vid Bombay, but the capabilities of Karachi harbour are ample, and increased accommodation has waited on increased trade. It is purely a question of money to make the port capable of any demand upon it.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE designation of the Assistant Adjutant-General, Hyderabad Contingent, has been changed to District Staff Officer, 1st class.

A MANUAL for the use of officers of the Army Service Corps, in connection with the tables of field army establishments, has been approved for issue.

OFFICERS who served with the Sikkim Field Force up to September 10th last have been given the right to take ninety days' privilege leave, when due, instead of the usual sixty days.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says:—"We understand that the Diocesan Synod of Lahore will be called upon to pass a resolution which will, if passed, go some way to strengthen the hands of Government in dealing with a social and military question which has been unpleasantly prominent since certain Acts were repealed."

THE Horse Guards authorities have it in contemplation to appoint musketry inspectors to districts for the supervision of Volunteer target practice and improvement of the shooting of Volunteers generally. How much longer, asks the Pioneer, are the 20,000 Volunteers in India to be without an inspector? Why cannot the Commander-in-Chief place the Volunteers in districts under the supervision of district inspectors of musketry in the same way as the regular troops now are, and why cannot the Government appoint an Inspector-General of Volunteers with a Staff Officer or the general supervision and welfare of the force?

THE same journal says:—"We are glad to see that the Government of India have at last done justice to the honorary commissioned officers and warrant officers by publishing amended leave rules. We pointed out in these columns over a year ago how desirable it was that the several regulations under which warrant officers could obtain leave should be revised. The new rules apply to all promoted after the date of their publication, and those under previous regulations are allowed one year in which to make up their mind whether they will abide under the old, or elect the new rules. This is giving them ample time for consideration."

HIS Excellency the Viceroy has distributed, through the commanding officer, Rs. 500 to the men of the 15th Bengal Cavalry, who furnished such excellent mounts for the Viceregal party on the occasion of their visit to Lundi Kotel from Peshawur. The artillerymen who drove him to Ali Musjid also received Rs. 400. During Sir C. Dilke's tour on the frontier the Civil and Military Gazette drew attention to the hardship often inflicted upon the sowars whose horses are borrowed and overridden for the benefit of distinguished tourists. Accidents must happen sometimes, and horses go lame, or even worse, on long frontier gallops; but so long as the personages who borrow the horses mark their appreciation of the loan it is less likely to be regarded as a grivance by the sowar.

THE first step towards the reduction of unnecessary returns in the Army has been taken in the discontinuance of detachment muster-rolls as vouchers to British regimental accounts. It was difficult to understand why these useless documents were ever introduced, seeing that Native corps which have been in existence for a century never rendered them. The order stopping the rendering of detachment muster-rolls to Pay Examiners, directs that they are to be retained by Paymasters, who are to add a certificate to their accounts "that all men absent from regimental head-quarters have been mustered." It would perhaps have been better to have abolished the returns altogether instead of ordering a half-measure which in no way saves clerical labour in their preparation, or the unnecessary waste of public money in their printing, or postage in their transmission between detachments and head-quarters.

THE INDIAN PRESS ON PRINCE VICTOR'S VISIT.

The experience of the Royal visitor who has just arrived in India has had something in common, thinks the Indian Daily News, with that of Her Majesty the Queen on one of her early visits to Scotland. In the latter case the citizens—we do not remember whether it was of Aberdeen, but perhaps some of our Scottish friends may do so—had made every preparation to give a welcome to the Sovereign, especially as she was young and popular. But as in the case of Bombay in the present instance they had not calculated the possibilities of speed when bearing royalty on its way, and Her Majesty arrived, not to find the Corporation robed in suitable apparel, and drawn up in respectful form to present the inevitable address. His Worship the Mayor, or may be the Sheriff, or whatever be the title of the chief of the city, was in bed! The incident gave rise to some pleasantry, and among other things to a song, whether original or a parody, we are not aware:—

"Hi, Jonny Cope, are ye waukin yet?"

It seems a strange thing that the youthful Queen should catch an old Scottish weasel asleep; and the incident, though somewhat awkward and embarrassing, was treated with more good humour than would be accorded to it at the present day. Our correspondent has given our readers particulars of the Prince's arrival and reception at Bombay, where preparations had been made for a formal reception, when the more than mail speed of the Oceana steamer brought the prince sooner than was expected, and if the head of the Corporation and his following—we do not like to use the word tail—were not actually asleep, they were certainly found wanting. Even the Volunteers were too slow, and the regular military and the police had to make up the inevitable show. The Prince had to wait until the officials were ready to receive him, and in the meantime other passengers had landed, and had assured the palpitating heart of Bombay that his Royal Highness was alive and well. There was, of course, the address, and though one can scarcely attach more importance to these formal proceedings than to after-dinner speeches, it would seem that the difficulty was to find something to say to the Prince. Of course, there was the bare welcome, and the rest was made up of a blast on the Bombay trumpet, which its citizens delight to blow. The address is a very meagre one certainly; but there must have been some difficulty in knowing what to say on a visit that has really no public significance. And we cannot help thinking that it would be much more consonant to the feelings of the young Prince to be spared a multiplicity of addresses, such as it is the custom to present to people without the least occasion for such manifestations. Bombay might well give the Prince a cordial welcome to India, and perhaps the capital of each province might do the same. But it would be well not to overdo this kind of almost unmeaning manifestation, for if a departure be made from some such distinction, it will be difficult to draw the line without offence. What is there in the Pagultollah Reading Club that its members should present an address? Or, why should the Commissioners of Mudlarkpore go out of their way to welcome a visitor who may desire more of privacy than they are willing to accord to him? It is announced that the visit is to be considered a private one, and if that be the reasonable desire of the Prince, some regard should be paid to it. As to the usual order of displays, would it not be better to let him see the land as it is and the people as they are, than to conceal everything that he ought to know by eyewash and bunting, and mislead him by fulsome addresses? India should be seen as it is, if anything is to be learnt from the visit; and, if not, it has no meaning from the public point of view. By all means give the visitor a cordial welcome; but it would be a pity to mar any possible good that might be learnt from the visit by the multiplication of any form of manifestation which would mislead more than gratify, and possibly defeat the purposes for which the voyage is undertaken.

The Bombay Gazette says:—First impressions are everything, and it is a happy geographical necessity that a princely visitor to India touches our shores at the point at which the wealth and energy and political and material progress of India are most strikingly concentrated. The young Prince will be reminded on all hands that Bombay is in something more than name the second city of the Empire, over which he will one day rule. The signs of wealth, of intelligence, and contentment will meet him in every direction. Public buildings which would be remarkable if they were met with in any capital in the world will testify at once to the abundance of our resources and to the dignity of the State. He will see a port administered with an intelligence to which the stewardship exercised over the port of London is in many respects distinctly inferior. He will see the magnificence of maritime wealth in a harbour which, before its connection with the Crown of England, was little more than a refuge for fishing boats. He will see streets laid out with an amplitude and munificence for which a parallel can be found only in Western capitals. Nor will the foundations upon which our new prosperity rests be absent from the bright picture which will meet the Prince's gaze. The chimneys of half a hundred of our cotton mills will scarcely add to the picturesqueness of the scene. But Englishmen never deny the Napoleonic impeachment of being a nation of shopkeepers, and this element in the landscape will be abundantly suggestive to a Prince who has already shown a faculty for drawing correct inferences from things around him. A much less intelligent observer than Prince Albert Victor would read in all these things the great political truth that the basis of Indian prosperity is found in the security amid which the people of India live and move and follow their daily avocations. Modern Bombay, in short, furnishes a great object lesson from which an impressionable mind like that of Prince Albert Victor is certain to derive lasting benefit. But the Prince will not tarry in our midst. Before the day is over he will have passed from the new capital of Western India to the old, and there he will meet with a hospitality, official and unofficial, which cannot fail to gratify him. There again, all classes have united in preparing to give him a hearty welcome. Organisations which have hitherto concerned themselves with little outside the purely political domain have endeavoured to demonstrate the loyalty of their politics by co-operating heartily for the success of the Prince's visit. If Prince Albert Victor can lend himself to historical impressions he will find in the very atmosphere of Poona more than enough to make his visit there memorable and interesting. To an active and well-furnished imagination nothing can be more impressive or suggestive than the air of the old Mahratta capital, and so intelligent a Prince is not likely to pass the greater part of a week in a city so rich in historical associations without carrying away with him an abundance of vivid and instructive suggestions.

THE TAINT OF THE TURF.

The Asian has the following remarks on this subject :—

Under the above heading the Civil and Military Gazette has taken up its parable to inveigh against, not only the increase of racing on the Indian turf, but more especially against the lotteries which are usually held in connection with such race-meetings. We quite agree with our contemporary that there is at present a great deal too much racing in India, for in proportion as the number of race-meetings have increased, the number of races for thoroughbred horses has decreased, except at a very few meetings, and the interest now appears to be centred in running animals under fourteen hands high for big stakes, and chiefly as a means of gambling. The consequence has been that the number of owners who now keep what we may call horses for racing purposes has steadily decreased, and will probably keep on decreasing except at the head centre of racing in Calcutta. In substitution for this, which was carried on by men who could afford it, and who also used freely to support the lotteries when the tickets were of a higher value than they are at present, we now see a number of young men with but limited means owning large stables of ponies, running them at meetings in different parts of the country, and often backing them either at the lotteries or with the bookmakers, for larger sums than they can afford to pay if they lose. Gentlemen of this class have not much to do with the totalisator where ready money is required, but they do not object to it publicly on that ground, but that they can never tell what price they may get against their animals. The bookmakers have but themselves to blame if they allow their customers to become too heavily indebted to them ; and those who are not behind the scenes would be surprised to learn the large amounts which are every year left unsettled by so-called officers and gentlemen in the lists of the bookmakers. As, however, the bookmakers need not bet on the nod, unless they feel inclined, no pity need be felt for their losses in this manner, though it must be admitted that the arrival of Messrs. Miller and Brittain in this country gave a great stimulus to racing, and in fact may be almost said to have revived the drooping fortune of the Calcutta meetings. As to the lotteries at which the Lahore paper states that the young and inexperienced are so often induced to gamble beyond their means, all that we can say is that those who have the management of the lotteries have full power in their own hands to check any such exuberant youths. The rules of lotteries provide that ready money is to paid for all tickets, and if the stewards of race-meetings would only insist upon carrying out this rule, no young gentleman would be able to plunge beyond the extent of the ready money which he had brought with him. In matters of this kind all personal feelings should be set aside, and if the stewards would add a clause to their race prospectuses that only ready money would be accepted at the lotteries, they would soon find the number of plungers decreased, though the race funds might also suffer from the falling off in the percentage. But the latter would certainly be a lesser evil than that of so many young men gambling beyond their means at race-meetings.

RAILWAY EXTENSION TOWARDS CABUL.

We (Civil and Military Gazette) are glad to hear that the question of further railway extension in the Cabul direction to which we drew attention in a recent leader is by no means being lost sight of. The military advisers to the Government of India are of course fully alive to its manifest importance, and we understand that the settlement of certain political considerations alone delays the commencement of detailed surveys for a line to Dakka—if not subsequently to Jellalabad. Between Peshawur and Jumrood an extension of the existing North-Western Railway is already in progress, and from thence through the Khyber the possibilities of the whole route are perfectly well known. From Jumrood to Landikhana, or at any rate up to the Kotal, and down again, the difficulties are no doubt considerable, though not so great as many that have been successfully overcome on other of our lines of far less consequence. From Landikhana onwards to Jellalabad there are no serious physical obstructions to prevent a permanent line being rapidly constructed, excepting the bit between Barikab and Ali Baghan, which length would require more careful aligning and more time to construct. An alternative, and in some respects, perhaps, a better route may possibly be found in a line from Peshawur to Michni, thence following one bank or other of the Cabul river to Dacca ; and it is probable that attention may first be given to a careful survey of this, as from a railway point of view it has not been sufficiently examined. Under the Gundamak treaty the tribal arrangements with the people of the Mallagori country and the Michni passes were left entirely in our hands, in the same manner as in the Khyber, and there should now be no difficulty in arranging for such a survey without involving any risk of political or tribal difficulties. From Jellalabad the question becomes more complicated, both for the political officer and the engineers. For some little distance beyond Jellalabad the country is sufficiently level to enable a railway to be located without difficulty. A short but formidable cutting would probably be needed to negotiate the Daronta Gorge, but keeping south of the Cabul river, we believe, it is admitted that a line could be constructed nearly as far as Jagdallak, which is very slightly over fifty miles from Cabul. Beyond this the difficulties would undoubtedly become more formidable, although extended surveys and better opportunities for examination might not improbably discover an easier route north of the Cabul river. As a preliminary, however, a line to Dakka, just outside the jurisdiction of the Amir, capable of prompt extension to Jellalabad so soon as negotiations warranted it, would be a substantial advance in the right direction.

A PLEASURABLE "INSPECTION."

A large party of ladies and gentlemen, which included the Baron and Lady Rosenburg, accompanied the Director of Mines, Hyderabad, in his recent inspection of the gold mines at Yellandipadu. During their stay at this station a big dinner was given by the Director. After dinner two toasts were proposed and drunk. These were "The Nizam and the Government of His Highness," with which were coupled the names of the Soobha and the official Director, and the "Deccan Mining Co.," with which was coupled the name of the Agents. In returning thanks for the Government the official Director said that it was a pleasure to him to meet so many kindly faces round him that night ; but it was a yet greater pleasure to him to hear such good things said to the Government of which he was a proud member. The Government of Hyderabad is always willing to further the interests of the Company, as with their progess and prosperity lies also the prosperity of a large and important department of the Government itself. So long as he was at the head of the Mining Board he assured the Company that their interests would receive his continued support, and he hoped that the Company would yet show a profit that would confound their enemies and pay a dividend that would surprise their shareholders. On their return journey the party halted for a while at Aler station, and here Lady Rosenburg made the following entry in the Remark Book kept at the station :—"A happy group of pilgrims (vide Sewell's Commentaries, vol. iv. p. 52) visited this station in returning from the Singareni coal-fields, and were entertained by the Soobha, Nawab Azim Yar Jung, Cherag Ali Bahadoor, at a most sumptuous repast, the remembrance of which will haunt them until the shares of the Deccan Mining Company stand at 100 premium. The best thanks of all are due to the Nawab for his great kindness and hospitality, a kindness which made a pleasurable and instructive visit the more pleasant."

AT the battalion parade of the Madras Volunteer Guards, Nov. 9th, Captain Tufnell, the adjutant of the regiment, was thrown off his horse and severely injured.

NATIVES AND THE COUNCIL OF INDIA.—At a meeting of the Council of the East India Association on Saturday Lord Stanley of Alderley stated that when the India Council Bill was before the House of Lords it was his intention to move an amendment to enable the Secretary of State for India to appoint three Natives of India to seats on the Council. But, on communicating with Viscount Cross, his Lordship found that the Secretary of State considered that he already had the power to appoint Natives of India, and, consequently, that the amendment was unnecessary. Lord Stanley asked and obtained the permission of Lord Cross to state this at the meeting of the East India Association.

THE INDIAN MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT.—The Secretary of the London Chamber of Commerce has received a copy of a letter sent to the Government of Bengal by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, under date Sept. 27, in acknowledging a communication dealing with the case of goods imported from a country other than the United Kingdom bearing a stamp which did not indicate the name of the place where the goods were made. The letter states :—"As the matter is of moment to importers, the committee have circulated copies of your office docket and its enclosure to the members of the Chamber. With reference to the orders conveyed in paragraph four of Mr. C. J. Lyall's letter, I am to point out that serious exception is taken to the provision which makes it imperative that 'the place of manufacture' as well as 'the country in which it is situated should be clearly indicated in the case of goods of foreign manufacture brought into India.' The committee intended to address Government on this point, but refrained in order to obtain further experience of the working of the Act, and postponed dealing with the question until the assembling of the Council in Calcutta in the cold weather. The orders of the Government of India, however, will probably give rise to considerable inconvenience if not, indeed, friction. Merchants and traders object that to give the name of the 'place' as well as the country of manufacture is to impose upon trade an obligation which is not necessary for the purposes, or the carrying into effect of the spirit of the Act, and which causes those concerned to disclose a detail of their business in a way which may make the disclosure a distinct disadvantage. The committee agree with this view, and are of opinion that if goods bear the name of 'the country of manufacture' that is all that can reasonably be demanded. I am to suggest that pending the consideration of the suggestion now put forward, the orders under notice may be so modified as not to make it imperative upon the Indian Customs authorities to enforce the provisions of the Act against goods not bearing the name of the 'place' of manufacture."

FEW men in the Army Medical Service have the good fortune to pass fifteen years in London, five at Simla, get special promotion and two decorations, and finally leave the service on a pension of £730 a-year while still comparatively young; so that Surgeon-General J. A. Marston, C.B., whose latest post has been Principal Medical Officer at Gibraltar, and who has just sent in his application to retire, is to be envied. After entering the service he did duty at home and at Malta for a few years. From Malta he passed into the London office of the Headquarters of the Medical Staff, the appointment being for five years. At the end of that time he was given an extension of five years more, and was then sent out to take up the post of Secretary to the Surgeon-General of Her Majesty's forces. When his five years' term was nearly up the Egyptian war of 1882 broke out, and Brigade-Surgeon Marston (as he then was) was taken from the Secretariat post at Simla and sent to Egypt as Sanitary Officer. In this position he served about two months, for which he received the medal and star, the Medjidie, and special promotion to deputy surgeon-general over the heads of a large number of brigade-surgeons. On return home he was again appointed to the London office, and when near the termination of his third five years in that institution he received the C.B. He was next sent for a short time to Egypt, and then, on promotion to surgeon-general, to Gibraltar, from which post he has just sent in his application to retire.—Pioneer.

WHEN the question arose of taking the soldier's ball-ammunition from him with a view to preventing suicide and murder, the Indian Press gave unanimous support to the military authorities in the orders which were passed. The latest returns show that the best results have followed, the diminution in crime having been most remarkable. The reduction in 1887-88 over 1886-87 was as follows: Suicide, 17; murder, 16; attempt at murder, 4; attempt at suicide, 10; total, 47 cases. Again in the current year the reduction has been 25. We have thus a total reduction of 72 cases in two years. To put the figures in another way, there were 110 cases under the four heads in 1886-87, 63 in the following, and only 38 in the year ended Sept. 30 last. In 1886-87 there were 13 murders committed in the Bombay Presidency, 11 of these being by one sepoy, who afterwards committed suicide. Out of the 38 cases in the year just closed, 25 were suicides, 4 of these occurring in the Oude division and 6 in the Bombay Presidency. There were only 7 murders, of which 2 were committed in Quetta. This striking decrease is a matter for hearty congratulation, more particularly as no case has been reported in which the men were placed in a position of danger by being deprived of their ball-ammunition. Under the arrangements which now obtain, the cartridges can be issued rapidly in case of emergency; but this is seldom likely to arise in any of our Indian cantonments, even those on the frontier.

PRIVATE (LANCE-CORPORAL) ISAAC MAY, of the 1st Battalion East Surrey Regiment, has just been tried in Allahabad by a Court-Martial, and convicted of cruelty to a dog. The sentence (confirmed) passed on him should be sufficient to act as a deterrent to other soldiers who may be of his disposition—hard labour for twenty-eight days and to be put under stoppages until he has made good the sum of Rs. 18, the value of his comrade's dog.

THE EURASIANS AND THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.—The supporters of the National Congress are fond of asserting that the only opponents of the movement are the Anglo-Indian official classes, but they will find this belief hard to reconcile with the sentiments expressed in an unusually able and vigorous address by the President of the Calcutta Eurasian Association before a meeting of the Allahabad Association recently. "Had the language used by the leaders of the Congress," said the Rev. Mr. Taylor, "been of a milder kind, had they not abused the rulers of this country to the extent they have done, had they restrained in some way the publication of seditious pamphlets, and had they been unsweeping in the changes they proposed in the administration of the country," then the Eurasians might have joined the movement; but, as it was, they had put forth such "strange and revolutionary theories" that it was "impossible for a loyal subject of Her Majesty to sympathise with them." One or two prominent Eurasians in Madras had joined the Congress, but even there they had not persuaded the community to follow them, and the Bombay Association had emphatically protested against being made "the catspaw of these demagogues." Mr. Taylor's words will surprise the Congress-wallas all the more disagreeably that the latter have usually treated the alliance of the Eurasians as a matter of course; but to the Government it will be a satisfaction to learn that among the Eurasians as among the Mahomedans there are earnest men who hope and believe they can get all the reforms they desire without recourse to the methods and practices of the sedition-monger.—Pioneer.

ASTHMA CURED,

No matter of how long standing, or how severe, by DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE; Price 4/6 and 10/- of Chemists; or free by Parcels Post from us.

Our illustrated book, "ASTHMA, ITS TREATMENT AND CURE," by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., &c., will be sent post free by us.

MRS. FLORENCE STONE, Montague Villa, Queen's Road, High Wycombe, says:—

"I have received great benefit from taking Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. For many months I have had an attack come on four nights out of seven, and lately in the day time as well; but since taking your medicine I have only had one slight attack in a month."

MRS. MARY PRICE, Gronant, near Holywell, says:—

"I had suffered for four years with Asthma. I have been now nine months without any attack. I have been cured by Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. I can never praise it enough."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DIARRHŒA. GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM; one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33 Gt. Russell St., W.C.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him ! ! I know him not ! ! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him ; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge ! !"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain ?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health ; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham !—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset ! ! ! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion ; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end ; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is : "I will wait and see ; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow ;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death ?

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic ; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk) ; you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver ; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armie , who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying —"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 28, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 22nd Nov.; from Madras to the 21st Nov.; and from Allahabad and Calcutta to the 20th Nov.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR arrived at Hyderabad from Poona on Friday, 15th Nov., and was received at the station by the Nizam, the Resident, the Minister, and other State officials.

THE Prince subsequently paid a visit to the Nizam, and drove through the city. In the evening he attended a ball at the Residency.

ON Saturday morning the Prince went on a sporting expedition after black buck, and had some excellent sport.

A BUCK was first killed by a cheetah, and afterwards the Royal sportsman and Nawab Afzur Jung shot several others.

IN the evening the Prince attended a State banquet given by the Nizam.

THE route to the Palace and the building itself were magnificently illuminated.

H.H. THE NIZAM, in proposing his guest's health, said the Prince would be welcomed wherever he went, but nowhere would he be welcomed more loyally than in Hyderabad. The Nizam desired the Prince to convey to Her Majesty assurances of his devoted friendship and loyalty.

ON Sunday the Prince spent a quiet day, and after dining with the officers, 7th Hussars, left for Madras.

HE arrived at the latter place on Tuesday evening, 19th Nov., and was well received.

ON Wednesday the Prince was engaged in snipe shooting at Chingleput, and in the evening he was present at a State banquet at Government House.

H.E. THE VICEROY has been paying a long visit to Quetta, and has visited many places of interest in the locality.

THE VICEROY AND LADY LANSDOWNE were to leave Quetta for Lahore, which they reach on the 23rd Nov. After a four days' halt there their Excellencies will travel direct to Calcutta.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL has returned to Calcutta from his trip to Sikkim.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF THE PUNJAB has reached Lahore on return from his frontier tour with the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief.

MR. SCOBLE and Mr. Hutchins, having completed their tour in Biluchistan, have arrived at Bombay from Karachi.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SIR JOHN MCQUEEN has returned to Abbottabad, and taken command of the Punjab Frontier Force, relieving Colonel Campbell, of the Guides, who returns to Mardan.

THE appointment of a Military Attaché to the British Embassy at Teheran is said to have been definitely decided upon. Major-General T. E. Gordon, who left India on vacating the Bareilly command three years ago, is the officer selected for the post.

MAJOR ROWAN HAMILTON will shortly revert to regimental duty, his time having expired on the Viceroy's Staff. Captain Brasier-Creagh, who is now an extra Aide-de-Camp, will be nominated to the permanent vacancy thus created.

A PUBLIC dinner to Mr. H. H. King, who arrived in Bombay on Monday, was given on the 28th Nov. by the members of the Uncovenanted Service.

MR. YEATMAN, District Superintendent of Police, Agra, was killed by a fall from his horse on Nov. 13th.

ANOTHER journey has been made through the difficult country to the north of Kashmir. Captain F. E. Younghusband, of the King's Dragoon Guards, already known as a most rising explorer, has traversed the Shimsal Valley beyond the Mustagh Pass, and crossed into Hunza, a route which no other traveller has ever followed. He is now on his way to Gilgit.

CAPTAIN DURAND has returned to Gilgit from Chitral, where he was cordially welcomed by the Mehtar. The officers of the new Gilgit Agency are now going into winter quarters.

A SURVEY for a line of railway along the left bank of the Kabul River, north of the Khyber Hills, will probably be undertaken forthwith. The route to Landi Kotal by way of the Mullagori country is meanwhile to remain untouched.

NEWS has reached Lahore of a destructive fire in the large serai at Kabul, frequented by traders from India. The damage is estimated at five lakhs of rupees, but it has probably been exaggerated.

STATE relief measures have been closed in Ganjam.

THE work of laying the field telegraph lines for the Chin-Lushai Expedition is making satisfactory progress, and permanent offices will be shortly opened at Lungleh on the Chittagong side and at Gungaw, on the border of the Southern Chin country.

THE outbreak of cholera in Western Persia seems to be a severe one. It appeared first at Kermanshah on Sept. 28th, and 200 deaths were reported in ten days. It has since somewhat abated in that district, but has spread to Shustar and Hamadan where some 400 or 500 persons have died. At Malayar, near the latter town, the people have fled panic-stricken from their homes. There had been no cases of cholera in Teheran up to Nov. 5th, and as the cold weather had then set in it was hoped that the epidemic in the western districts would shortly die out.

THE Government of Bombay assemble in Bombay on the 10th proximo.

THE salt duty realised during the present official year is nearly nine lakhs in excess of that of the first seven months in 1888.

LORD AVA has had his jaw fractured by a kick from a pony.

AN influential committee has been formed in Assam to watch all matters connected with the tea industry in the province.

CALCUTTA despatched 2,215 emigrants to the Colonies in September, 1,064 for Demerara, 533 for Trinidad, and 618 for Mauritius.

THE Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association in the Punjab purpose passing a resolution at an early meeting expressing disapproval of the Congress and its ways.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SYMONS has arrived at Pokoko, on the Irrawaddy, and assumed command of the Chin Expeditionary Force.

THE death has occurred at Jhelum, from enteric fever, of Surgeon-Major Shirley Deakin, one of the most skilful surgeons in the Indian Medical Service.

NOTES.

THE latest telegrams and papers from India continue to be absorbed in the movements of Prince Albert Victor. He is now devoting himself to "sport." He has shot a bison, a Sambhur deer; and Reuter wired yesterday that he had gone out snipe-shooting, and that "the party made a large bag, and his Royal Highness expressed himself much pleased." This is news, indeed!

THE news, however, of the public meeting held in Calcutta with regard to arrangements for the Prince's reception there is not so satisfactory. It is not satisfactory to English ideas of order and decorum, to say nothing of loyalty, to read that a meeting presided over by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and attended by the Chief Justice and all the leading representatives of the English community, and which was convened for the purpose of settling the manner in which the Queen-Empress's grandson should be welcomed at the capital of her Indian Empire, had to break up in confusion and disorder, owing to a preconcerted demonstration of hostility arranged by Native editors "notorious for their hostility to the constituted authority."

ACCORDING to the Times correspondent, who was doubtless present:—"The Lieutenant-Governor was compelled to dismiss, with purposes unfulfilled, a large assembly of responsible citizens, all most anxious to demonstrate their loyalty to the Throne, for the sole reason that a large number of undisciplined college students, drunk with the new wine of congress ideas, and none of whom could or would have subscribed a rupee, were employed by political wirepullers to defeat and discredit, by sheer force of numbers, the loyal endeavours of the ratepaying community to pay fitting honour to the Queen's grandson." And this demonstration took place on the very day when, at the National Liberal Club in London, a number of English officials and politicians were making speeches in favour of the mild motives and manners of the Congress men, over whose meeting Sir William Wedderburn is about to preside.

THE Daily News, commenting on the speeches made at this Wedderburn banquet, told its readers next day that "The Indian Congress is only a step to something else. But there is no reason why that something else should be anything to bring alarm with it. The Congress is merely an assembly of national delegates, who meet and consider Indian questions, talk over them, and pass resolutions about them."

THIS is a mild and comforting view for English readers, but the news from India does not altogether confirm confidence in this view. And, as to the Congress being in any way representative of the opinion of the millions of India, here is what a paper—most friendly to the Natives of India, and which came to hand by last mail—says of the institution:—"The Congress seems defective in its very constitution. No qualification appears requisite to fit a man to be a member. Anybody, at any time, may enroll himself as a Congress-wallah. He is responsible to nobody, except to the law of the land. In fact, he represents himself and no one else. He may say anything, and add his name to the list of members. His object is the redress of his imaginary wrongs and to effect this he is advised to claim representation. He scarcely knows what the word means, and yet he forms a fair sample of the people who join in the chorus which demands 'a representative Government.'"

AND yet this is the institution to which the Viceroy and his Council should, according to the Daily News, look for the correct expression of Native opinion, and regard it as a power for good in securing the contentment of the Indian population and the safety of the Indian Empire. "For," says the Radical journal, carried away by the oratory of the Wedderburn luncheon, "we should in all probability never have had the Indian Mutiny if before that time there could have been established an intelligent National Congress of India." Risum teneatis amici?

"THE India Office," says the Daily Telegraph, "has now before it three alternative schemes for the reform of the India Civil Service Examination. Two have been contributed from Oxford, and one from Cambridge. The latter recommends archæology, while scientific Oxford put forward the claims of natural science in all its subdivisions, and the humanitarians desire to make the examination conform somewhat more nearly to the type known as "Greats." Should Lord Cross see his way to accept the last suggestion the "crammers" would find some of their occupation gone, and a happy reciprocal influence might be established between the examinations for the India Civil Service and the Oxford schools." In the meantime a telegram from Calcutta states that the Indian Uncovenanted Service is about to petition Parliament for a Royal Commission into its grievances, as it sees no way of redress except by an appeal to public opinion. We have not strong faith in Royal Commissions; but the grievances of the Uncovenanted are many and just, and must be righted sooner or later.

THE London Chamber of Commerce having inquired of the Secretary of State for India whether any new railway surveys were contemplated in Burma, Mr. Horace Walpole, in a reply from the India Office, dated the 27th of November, says:—"I am directed to inform you that the Government of India have stated in a despatch just received that they propose, during the coming cold season, to send parties to reconnoitre two lines which are likely to be of great value—one westward, connecting the Mu Valley line with the Chindwin River, and one eastwards to the Shan States—the approximate lengths being about 90 and 150 miles respectively."

LORD HARRIS on Saturday visited Canterbury, and was presented, on behalf of the Conservatives of the city, with an illuminated address, congratulating him upon having been appointed to the Governorship of Bombay. In returning thanks, his lordship said that wherever he was, or whatever he was doing, his thoughts must largely return to the county in which he had lived, so far as he could, for the greater part of his life. It was a fact, as had been stated, that his family had for generations past been connected with the Government of India. It was only after very careful deliberation, and with some misgiving, that he had undertaken a post so responsible as that to which he had been appointed, and it was very much due to a feeling of sincere affection for India and its people, an affection which he took the liberty of believing was based on the hereditary association to which he had referred.

ALTHOUGH a long illness which it was known to his friends could have but a fatal termination, many Anglo-Indians have learnt with regret of the death of "Commissary-General" Willes, who has just been laid to rest in Kensal Green Cemetery. Lieutenant-General John Irwin Willes entered the Indian Army in February, 1843, obtained his commission as Lieutenant in May, 1848, Captain in July, 1857, Major in February, 1863, Colonel in February, 1869, and Major-General in September, 1885. General Willes served under Sir Charles Napier against the hill tribes in Scinde in 1845, and also took part in the Punjab Campaign of 1848-49, for which he received the medal. For his services with the Bhootan Expedition in 1865 he received the medal, and was mentioned in despatches. But he will be better remembered amongst old Indian friends as the genial "Commissary-General," whose pleasant manner, kindly heart, and sincere, but unpretending, hospitality made him a favourite throughout India, from Simla to Calcutta.

THERE has been heavy rain at Calcutta, and the skies promise some in these Provinces.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 8.

A telegram from Demagiri reports that the troops constituting the Lushai column are being rapidly concentrated and pushed forward to Lungleh. The health of the troops is good. The weather is cold and dry. The Hiwling chiefs are assisting to clear the jungle for the advance of the northern column, which is intended to follow the banks of the Khlong river. It has been found impossible to begin active operations until Lungleh shall have been provisioned with two months' supplies. The northern column, 800 strong, accompanied by 2,000 coolies, acts independently. The main object is to attack the Sukpuilals' country, and exact reprisals for raids. It is anticipated that the only serious opposition will be from the impenetrable character of the jungle.

A telegram from Hyderabad reports the discovery of a plot to assassinate the Prime Minister, Sir Asman Jah. No details have been received. Surprise is felt, as he is believed to be universally popular and respected.

Tantia Bheel, notwithstanding the endeavours made in some quarters to obtain mitigation of the sentence, was executed at Jubbulpore on Wednesday. He persistently affirmed his innocence of the murder. Some of his relatives were present, but they declined to dispose of the body on the grounds that Tantia had been outcasted and rendered impure by execution. They expressed great dissatisfaction that he had accumulated no loot for the family.

A court-martial has convicted seven privates of the 4th Madras Pioneers of mutiny, and has sentenced one man, for striking an English officer with his closed fist, to ten years' transportation. The rest were awarded various terms of imprisonment with hard labour.

Sinister reports have been in circulation with reference to alleged serious disturbances among the Kols in Chota Nagpore. The ryots charge the Zemindars, who are chiefly of Rajpoot descent, with oppression in exacting forced labour without payment. In 1887 they petitioned the Queen for a Parliamentary Commission; this year they are taking the law into their own hands, and are endeavouring to remedy abuses by reaping the Zemindars' crops, and appropriating them to their own use. Beyond this no serious uprising is anticipated by the Government. However, the police force has been strengthened, and other precautions have been taken for the preservation of order.

On Tuesday the Duke of Connaught opened the seventeeth annual Presidency rifle meeting at Bombay. In the course of his speech he said the entries showed an increase of 500 as compared with the large meeting last year. There were two new matches—for judging distance, and for shooting with revolvers at a running man. He hoped the latter would afford an inducement to become efficient in revolver shooting, which hitherto had not been the case. New targets, in the shape of a running man, and of a bounding tiger running on a switch-back railway, had been invented by Captain Rossiter. The money prizes amounted to 12,000 rupees, and there were also numerous valuable cups. He felt great regret that it was the last time he should be present.

The Duchess of Connaught fired a rifle sighted up to 500 yards and hit the bull's-eye. In a competition between Nordenfelt and Gardner guns the Gardner fired 135 shots, scoring 51 hits, and the Nordenfelt 170, scoring 58.

Grain riots are reported at Kumbhakonam; the grain shops were broken open and looted.

A bust of Sir Frank Souter, the popular Commissioner of Police, was recently unveiled before a large assembly by the Chief Justice of Bombay. He eulogised in eloquent terms Sir F. Souter's distinguished services and his various physical and moral qualities, especially his great independence of character and his geniality and kindness of disposition, which rendered him a general favourite.

The Duke of Connaught was entertained at a grand Masonic banquet in Bombay on Monday, when he was presented with the appointment of Honorary Grand Past Master of all the Scottish Freemasons in India.

The past week has been chiefly devoted by Prince Albert Victor to sport, in which he seems to have been fairly successful. He and his suite, consisting of Sir E. Bradford, Captain Harvey, and Captain Holford, have been most hospitably received by the leading Natives and feudatory rajahs, and the utmost enthusiasm has been displayed wherever he was enabled to break his journey. Great disappointment was experienced at his inability to make any lengthened stay in Madura in consequence of an outbreak of cholera. He was obliged, accordingly, to give up his intention of opening the Albert-bridge, of which the foundation-stone was laid by his father. At Tinnevelly he attended a Native entertainment, and thence drove thirty-six miles to Courtallum, crowds of people lining the road the whole way. Here he was met by the Maharajah of Travancore. After dark he drove to the waterfalls, which were illuminated by coloured lamps. There was a State banquet at the Residency, at which the Maharajah proposed the health of the Empress and of the Prince. The following morning Prince Albert Victor started for the shooting camp at Kolaturpolay. Numerous triumphal arches were erected en route bearing loyal greetings of welcome. The Prince succeeded in shooting a large Sambur deer. At the conclusion of the shooting he returns to Courtallum and thence proceeds to Tinnevelly.

A public meeting was held in Calcutta on Friday to pass resolutions in reference to the Prince's intended visit to the metropolis. The Lieutenant-Governor presided. The meeting was very representative in character and was attended by the Chief Justice, the members of Council, and other leading members of the European and Native communities. Unfortunately, however, for the success and harmony of the meeting the town-hall was closely packed with some 2,000 Bengalee college students. These ill-mannered and unruly youths, acting under the leadership of certain Native newspaper editors who have rendered themselves notorious by their attitude of political opposition to the constituted authority, not only by preconcerted demonstration rendered the speeches inaudible, but succeeded in carrying an amendment over the Lieutenant-Governor's head which completely invalidated and rendered futile the objects of the meeting. The Lieutenant-Governor was compelled to dismiss, with purposes unfulfilled, a large assembly of responsible citizens, all most anxious to demonstrate their loyalty to the Throne, for the sole reason that a large number of undisciplined college students, drunk with the new wine of congress ideas and none of whom could or would have subscribed a rupee, were employed by political wirepullers to defeat and discredit, by sheer force of numbers, the loyal endeavours of the ratepaying community to pay fitting honour to the Queen's grandson.

The leading Native paper criticises in severe terms what can only be considered, however, as the natural result of its own political preaching. The article concludes with these words:—"The whole thing is most unfortunate and severely reflects on the reputation of Calcutta. We have never had a greater scandal." This condemnation is emphatically endorsed by every Native of respectable position; but, unfortunate as is this fiasco at such a time, it may possibly lead to useful results both in England and in India. It is a revelation and a lesson, and by its salutary warning will probably operate as a valuable aid in securing united action by all the property classes of the community of every race and creed in resisting, with united front, the rapidly increasing growth of Socialistic doctrines. The present case merely affronts the decencies of ordinary public life, but if, by large and improvident concessions of electoral and political power, this present insubordinate and obstructive spirit were clothed with any control over the Government policy the administration of the country might be brought to a serious deadlock. This incident will serve as a useful text for discussion at the forthcoming Congress meeting at Bombay.

The Viceroy holds a Levée on Tuesday, and there will be a Drawing Room on the 13th.

BURMA.

RANGOON, DEC. 7.

Sir C. Crosthwaite arrived here to-day.

Major Raikes's negotiations with the Tashon chiefs have terminated unsuccessfully. He met the principal chiefs at Kikaung on the 2nd inst. They surrendered seventeen captives, but refused to consent to the advance of British troops through the Tashon territory. Any such advance would be resisted. The Tashons are apparently willing to pay the indemnity and tribute demanded, but the chiefs strongly urged the restoration of the ex-Sawbwa of Kalay, on which petty State the Tashon territory abuts. They offered if the ex-Sawbwa were restored to prevent future raids by neighbouring tribes into the Kalay State and to obtain the restoration of all captives held by the Siyin and Kanhow tribes. The chiefs expressed great hostility to the present Sawbwa of Kalay, who has been appointed by the British since the annexation of Upper Burma. Friendly relations were declared to be impossible while the present Sawbwa remained in power. It is known that Major Raikes favours the removal of the present Sawbwa and a conciliatory policy towards the Tashons. Brigadier Symons, who, when the troops advance, assumes control of the political relations, favours very rigorous measures. While Major Raikes's negotiations with the chiefs were proceeding Brigadier Symons issued a long circular to the troops under his command, declaring that whether the Tashons submitted or not an advance on the ywama (capital) would take place and our terms be there imposed.

Stedman. They were met by Sawlawi, the chief of the Red Karenni, who will escort them to Sawlon, his capital.

Mr. MacDonnell made an interesting speech at the St. Andrew's dinner. Reviewing the present position of Buma, he remarked that the attention not only of India, but of Great Britain, had been fixed on the Government, and its performances had been subjected to close, and, he would add, often useful criticism. He dwelt on the great progress made in all directions since the annexation not only in establishing order, but also in constructive government. Much had been done, but improvement was required in many directions, and he anticipated that Sir Charles Crosthwaite, who would soon relieve him of his heavy charge, would take the steps necessary to effect it. Mr. MacDonnell was very warmly received, and was loudly cheered by his audience, which was numerous, influential, and representative.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR'S TOUR.

(Daily News Correspondent.)

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

Opinion has been divided here as to what form the public recognition of the Prince's visit should take. Many leading natives desired to make a grand entertainment to the Prince the first object, while another section favoured a permanent memorial. At a public meeting convened by the sheriff this afternoon, a proposal was carried to invite subscriptions for a permanent memorial which, it is suggested, should take the form of a Leper Asylum.

GRAIN RIOTS IN MADRAS.

CALCUTTA, FRIDAY NIGHT.

The scarcity threatened in several districts in the South of the Madras Presidency has led to grain riots. Disturbances are reported from Kumbaconum, where the bunnias shops have been looted.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

CHANGELESS NO LONGER.

(Madras Times.)

Singling out India as one country included in the comprehensive term "the changeless East," we may just consider whether this term can now be applied to her with justice. Is the India of to-day essentially the India of a few centuries ago; are the Indians now what they were then? The Indians, as we term them in deference to a Native contemporary, are essentially a conservative people. This conservatism has, perhaps, as in the case of the Jews, been the main instrument in preserving the various peoples of India from either amalgamation or extinction. Yet, to some extent, these peoples have availed themselves of the good brought to them with the successive waves of invasion which have swept over India. We read of Hindu ministers and other officers, both in the civil and military services, as once employed under Mahomedan rulers. The Mahomedans in their position of conquerors probably desired to conciliate their Hindu subjects as well as to take advantage of them as appropriate mediums to negotiate between the Government and the governed, to keep order with the minimum of trouble, and to assuage any lurking irritation which might otherwise have been fanned into flames. In former days high-caste Hindus did not disdain to serve under Mahomedan rule, and now also the Hindu is ready to serve under the foreign administration which has established itself, and which tries to be regarded as that most adapted to hold the balance between Hindus and Mahomedans, the peoples of different races and States, and the various conflicting interests which abound in this country. This ready adaptation of himself to the requirements of the time shows that change is not unknown to the Hindu. He may be conservative, but the word can hardly now be applied in an opprobrious sense, except in so far as he clings to his old habits, because he has not yet seen the need of a change, or because he has not satisfied himself that any benefit would accrue to him from such a change. There, is of course, a wide difference between the educated Hindu and his uneducated brother, but it is from the career of the former that we must gather the clue to the real characteristics of the race, from those who have had an opportunity of advancing that we must judge whether there exists within them the seed of future progress and the desire to examine, each for himself, how the old order bears comparison with such new features as come under his notice.

Under British rule the Hindu's proverbial aversion to change is seen at a minimum, while his capacity for adapting himself to surrounding circumstances shows at a maximum. He has been imbued with an ambition to advance, and on all sides we see evidence that this spirit is at work, producing those small changes from which important reforms may subsequently evolve. The increasing wear of English clothes is as significant in its way as the spread of a knowledge of the English language. By the introduction of the railway has been germinated a spirit which might almost be termed migratory, when compared with that which influenced the people in days when travelling was a matter of great delay and no small risk. The times have passed when the high caste Government servant, on his return from work, washed himself clear of the "pollution" with which his body had been contaminated during the day. In many other matters, there are signs that "caste" has proved itself by no means so rigid as Europeans generally suppose it to be, and that Hindu social laws, like Government's Acts, can prove elastic under the pressure of "expediency." And then again, a reference to merchants would show us what a change has passed over the taste of even the uneducated among buyers of piece-goods, umbrellas, and what not. Where in certain printed goods Manchester once sent out one special pattern known par excellence as "Madras," where it once sent also, year after year, its thousands of blue, green and yellow or blue and white, or other sombre-looking goods, it now ships hundreds of new designs worked in the most brilliant of colours. In Madras, notably, Manchester has found a change. It is no longer "send no new pattern to Madras"; it is, "send something new," and every season sees one novelty after another placed in the local bazaars, thence to be distributed over the Presidency. The remark applies to women's garments as well as to men's. In this respect, at any rate, the Indian woman shows herself by no means conservative, and from this fact alone we might almost be justified in deducing that most of her supposed conservatism arises more from the manner of her life now than from the influence upon her mind of ancient traditions.

WHAT HANDICAPS QUETTA?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "PIONEER."

SIR,—I should be glad to obtain space to draw your attention to what seems to me to be a great handicap on the progress of Quetta as a commercial centre and a comfortable station. I refer to the practically prohibitive railway charges for the transport of passengers and goods up the Bolan Pass and the Harnai line. I am quite aware of the cost of construction, and also of repair and maintenance of these lines, but it seems to me to be unfair and contrary to English custom to compel a small body of residents to pay extra rates if going on leave or obtaining necessary supplies because they are quartered in a station placed on a difficult railway line. I do not think that because a Welshman lives on the far side of the Menai Bridge that his mileage rate for his fare is therefore increased, and when the Forth Bridge is finished I do not think that travellers over it will pay an extra mileage. Why, then, should a small body of residents compelled to live in a distant and trying station be required to pay extra rates to try and repay the State for its expenditure on a frontier defence line? The amount recouped to the State must be infinitesimal, the pressure on the few individuals affected is extreme, and the result in crippling commercial development highly injurious to any Central Asian trade. One of the main arguments for State control of railways is that by centralising the profits railway extensions could be made to outlying stations to which private companies trusting to percentage returns would not extend their lines. The State, however, should be above petty gain and should equalise its tariffs as far as possible.

In the old days before annexation the traveller up the Bolan was looted by the pass marauders or by prohibitive transit duties levied by Native rulers along the route, and one of the first aims of Sir Robert Sandeman in developing his new province was to commute or abolish the pass dues and let trade circulate freely along the line. Hardly, however, has he achieved this freedom when a State railway appears and practically renews all the old prohibitive system in the shape of heavy extra fares and goods tariff. This presses very hardly on all Biluchistan residents and merchants, because even in the old camel-traffic days prices were rapidly falling, as peace and order rendered it possible for the camel-owners to compete amongst themselves for freight up and down the pass. Any Quetta merchant will tell you that the Kandahar kafilas are daily avoiding Quetta and travelling vid Khelat direct to Karachi, whereas if the railway rates were moderate Chaman would certainly become a mart and but little camel traffic would cross the Khojak Pass. It seems to me that the approaching opening of the Khojak tunnel would be a good time to lower the rates over the whole Peshin line, and Quetta should be at once brought into closer union with the Indus Valley and Karachi by moderate rates. Commerce would at once develop, and prices would fall at Quetta to moderate and just rates.

What is the present state of affairs? To enable a State railway to show an attempt at a balance every other State department is being heavily taxed. Take the Sepoy's cost of maintenance. Every Sepoy is receiving four rupees per mensem for compensation for dearness of food-grains which must be carried by the railway to feed him. Lower the tariffs and food would be cheaper and compensation less. It is not possible to isolate so clearly the increased cost of the English soldier, but it must be very heavy, as he cannot exist on the scanty local supplies, but must draw upon the Indus Valley and Karachi for provisions. While the State, therefore, is gaining a very nominal credit from the railway receipts it is paying out heavily in all other departments: but, worst of all, the strangling of commercial development is complete, and trains are running empty which might be full.

Prohibitive tariffs for wood carriage are clearing the bare and rugged Biluch hills of even the scanty juniper shrubs that supply the local firewood, and a terrible fuel famine stares one in the face in a climate where to be exposed to cold is to run great risks. The Viceroy will visit Quetta soon, and it would be conferring an untold boon on Quetta, the whole Biluch country and Central Asian trade developments if he could consider whether the present prohibitive railway tariff could be modified without injury to the revenues of the Empire. The boon to private individuals would be very great.

WAYFARER.

ECCLESIASTICAL CHANGES.

The Bombay Diocesan Record notifies the following ecclesiastical changes:—

The Rev. G. H. Lewis, Chaplain of St. Paul's, Poona, was appointed to officiate as Garrison Chaplain at the Presidency, and the Ven. C. F. H. Johnston, Archdeacon, officiated as Chaplain of St. Paul's, Poona, from the 18th July, 1889, in each case as a temporary measure. They reverted to their respective appointments on the 10th August, 1889.

The Rev. H. T. Higginson Rountree, and the Rev. Lancelot Melvill Haslope, M.A., have been appointed Junior Chaplains on the Bombay Establishment. The former joined his appointment on the forenoon of the 22nd September, 1889, and has been put in orders to make the Konkan tour, spending two Sundays at Ratnagiri and two at Karwar.

The Ven. C. F. H. Johnson, Archdeacon, proceeded to Europe on one year's medical furlough from the 6th August, 1889.

The Rev. A. G. Lewis, B.D., has been appointed to act as Archdeacon of Bombay during the absence of the Ven. C. F. H. Johnston.

The Rev. W. B. Preston, Chaplain of Ahmedabad, passed the required examination for the lower standard in Hindustani.

By a resolution of the Government of India, the Chaplains on the regular Establishment have been appointed ex-officio Registrars of Births and Deaths.

The Rev. W. Clark retired from the service from the 6th October, 1889.

The Rev. H. D. Beresford resigned the Harbour Chaplaincy, and left for England by the mail of Sept. 10th.

The Rev. H. C. Squires has also left for England.

THE SUPPRESSION OF THE "PRAJA BANDU".

The Indian Nation, published in Calcutta, says:—

"We are sorry we cannot sympathise with the Praja Bandhu in its misfortune. For a long time past it had been tempting fate, and the consequence has come. We do not remember anything in special about the articles referred to in the Government letter, but we remember very well the general tone of the paper, and we can say it was scurrilous in the extreme. No Government in the world, except the English, would have permitted the newspaper so long to be circulated in its territory. That the proprietor of such a newspaper should be dismissed from Government service is only fair. Government does not pay its servants for the luxury of being abused; and gentlemen who find fault with the Government for its recent action have only to remember what they would do to their servants who abused them. Government is also right in stopping the circulation of the paper in British territory through the medium of British post-offices. A Government which would passively look on while a newspaper was spreading disaffection, persistently, causelessly, and offensively, would be exhibiting not only weakness but stupidity. . . . The so-called seditious writing in a paper like the Praja Bandhu is wretched stuff, having not the slightest intellectual merit. The newspaper Press in Bengal is being greatly weakened by the retirement or death of competent men, and by the accession into the ranks of journalists of men whose education is of the most contemptible kind. Quite recently there seems to have grown up in Bengal a wholly erroneous idea of the duties of a newspaper. It seems to be thought that the main function of a newspaper is not to criticise measures or suggest measures for the better government of the country and to place ideas before the people, but to dwell on the acts of individual officials. The journalist of to-day conceives it to be his duty not, like Kristo Das Pal, to criticise elaborately a Financial Statement or to make a study of Legislative Bill, section by section, but to discover and to publish the indebtedness of one official or the amours of another, or the private correspondence of a third. The merit and the credit of the Native Press have alike been going down for some time, and it was easy to see that if the people would do nothing for themselves Government might be tempted to do something."

AN INDIAN FABLE.

(Indian Planters' Gazette.)

Once upon a time a Bengali Editor went to a celebrated sage, who had for years dispensed wisdom and counsel to his countrymen, while he told his beads and solicited alms at Mullick's Bathing Ghat, in Calcutta, and said:—"Oh! wise and holy man I have come to you for advice and instruction. I am by profession a journalist, my whole life and labours are devoted to the service of my beloved country and caste. But, unfortunately, whatever I say is regarded with doubt and suspicion; even when I speak the truth I am not believed." "Ah! my son," said the sage, "and this is the wherefore. It usually so happens that what you add to a story swallows up what is real, and you leave not a particle of the truth to be seen. Go your way, my son, and learn wisdom for the future by your experience of the past."

A week later the Editor returned to the sage and said, reproachfully, "Oh! wise and holy man, I followed your advice. Of late I have written nothing but the honest, open naked truth; nevertheless, I have signally failed in producing the slightest impression on our obdurate rulers." "Ah! my son," returned the sage, "it is the old story of the boy and the wolf; you have cried danger so long when there was no danger that nobody marks your call when danger is actually present. You must go back and make another effort."

The journalist accordingly left the presence of the sage with scorn and disappointment depicted in the expression of his face. A week later he returned to the holy man, his countenance lit up with a smile of triumph.

"Ah! my son," said the sage, as the Editor entered his presence, "I perceive you have been successful at last." "I have," replied the man of words, "even beyond my most sanguine anticipation; and this is how I did it. I commenced a desperate attack upon an unpopular political, in which there was not a single word of truth; but instead of putting myself forward as the author, fathered the series of articles upon a fictitious correspondent. This double-barrelled falsehood caught the eye and ear of Government, and an immediate inquiry has been ordered. True, nothing may come of it; but the world will say there is no smoke without fire, and the Commission of Inquiry only failed to get at the facts in consequence of the position of the accused." "Ah! my son," said the sage, in a transport of delight, "your English education has not extinguished your national characteristics, as was at one time predicted it would do, after all! Go in peace, my son; it is to the wisdom of the East, and not the learning of the West, you owe your success. Our wise men may not have been perfect in their lives, their morals might have been purer, and their social customs admitted of considerable amendment; but, with all their faults, they have left us some excellent maxims, for which we reverence and respect their memory! Where! Oh where! my son, will you find such profound, excellent wisdom as lies concealed in the moral of our story?—The weakest on a straight course may be the strongest on a crooked path!"*

BENGAL.

AT a meeting (held at Calcutta to-day) of the local Corporation the subject of expending 10,000 rupees for the reception of Prince Albert Victor and H. E. the Viceroy, and for an address and casket to the former, was discussed. The editor of the Bengalee newspaper brought forward an amendment that 2,000 rupees be voted for the address and casket alone. His reason for adopting this course was that if the Municipality undertook the business of reception by themselves it would preclude other public bodies from joining in the movement. He therefore proposed that a committee be appointed to draw up the address, and public bodies in town be invited to join in giving the Prince a fitting welcome, in which case the Municipal Corporation would come forward with further subscriptions for the same purpose. The Chairman said that 10,000 rupees was not intended for the address and casket alone, but included the Prince's visit to waterworks at Pultah, near Barrackpore, by river, which they had contemplated; but as it would occupy one whole day, and as owing to the programme during the Prince's stay among us being almost full, and they might be disappointed, he would leave the Commissioners to decide the point. It was then carried by a majority that for the present the above mentioned amendment be carried out, and when wishes of other public bodies were ascertained a further subscription be made from Municipal coffers towards the general object.

CALCUTTA is still busy sending forward officers and men and munitions for the Chin-Lushai expedition. The Bhundara was to have sailed on the 13th inst. for Chittagong, taking Captain Browne, Staff Corps, and Lieutenant Birkbeck, King's Dragoon Guards, Signalling Officers; Lieutenant Davidson, Leinster Regiment, and 500 transport coolies; Surgeons-Major Murphy and McDonnell, and Surgeon Bigger.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and party, on leaving Darjeeling on Oct. 31, went to Sandykfoo, Sikkim, thirty-six miles out, and from there to Phaloot. The best point for viewing the higher ranges of the Himalayas is from these places. Holiographic messages were exchanged with Darjeeling. On Nov. 2 the party crossed the Singleha, 12,130 feet, the highest point reached, to a place called Chabamjan; thence the descent was made to the Killait Valley, 10,000 to 4,000 feet, along which runs the main road from Nepal to the Sikkim capital. On Nov. 5 visits were paid to the monasteries of Pemionchi and Sangrachelling. The party were well received by the Lamas and monks. They crossed the great Ranjeet and reached the Teesta Valley. At Tumlong they met the Raja of Sikkim, and ceremonial visits were paid. From Tumlong the party went to Guntok and reached Pakhyong. On the 12th they passed through Pedong and Russum, and camped for the last time on the hills at Pasheting, 6,500 feet. Jalpaigori was reached on the 16th, and after a halt of one day the party journeyed to Calcutta. The trip was most enjoyable, fine weather being experienced throughout. At Sandykfoo and Phaloot the thermometer fell 4 to 5 degrees below freezing point.

MADRAS.

(Nov. 21.)

THE Prince practically did nothing till noon to-day, when his Royal Highness paid a visit to the Madras Museum to see the section of elephants' skulls, the object of his visit being to acquire a knowledge of elephant shooting, which will be useful when on his sporting expedition to Mysore. Capts. Holford and Harvey and Mr. Claude Vincent accompanied his Royal Highness, who, in the absence of Dr. Thurston, Curator, was received by Mr. Carter, of the Madras Railway, an old shikari, who furnished much information which is likely to prove useful to the Royal sportsman in the coming elephant shooting excursion. This afternoon his Royal Highness played in a scratch game of polo. The island on which it took place was much affected by a shower of rain early in the morning, the ground being very heavy. The Prince commenced in the second quarter, and played well; but he did not succeed in getting a goal. The attendance of spectators was numerous. Much interest was taken in the game of the last quarter, which was played in the dark. A band of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry discoursed a selection of music. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Arbuthnot witnessed a part of the game in the evening. A small informal dinner at Government House was followed by a State Ball, which was largely attended.

BOMBAY.

(Nov. 22.)

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR having very graciously accepted the invitation of the Municipality to spend some days in Bombay on his return journey, the measures contemplated have been promptly taken in hand to organise a fête suitable to the occasion in the Victoria Gardens. Advantage will be taken of the opportunity to give an impetus to the schemes already drawn up by the Municipal Commissioner for the reorganisation and improvement of the Gardens. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught has expressed his warm approval of this intention, and has consented to be a patron of the fête. A flower and botanical show will be organised, and the new arrangements for the better housing and displaying of the zoological collection will be pushed on at once. The museum will be availed of for the exhibition of collections of the products and manufactures of the Presidency. A horse, cattle, poultry, and dog show are included in the programme. The Chief Justice, Sir Charles Sergeant, Mr. Justice Bayley, Mr. Justice Birdwood, and other gentlemen of position, will take an active part in the organisation of the fête. General Budgen has kindly undertaken to supervise the horse show. Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy will be chairman of the Lighting and Decorations Committee. A provisional list of the gentlemen who have consented to serve on the committee is given in another column and a complete list will be published in a day or two. A Central Committee composed of the President and ex-Presidents of the Corporation, has been formed, around which the special committees will group. Mr. Ollivant has asked the Government for support and countenance in the scheme, which is mainly of his devising. His Excellency the Governor has written cordially approving of the proposal as a whole, and promising support. The Princes and Chiefs of Western India will, with H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught and H. E. Lord Reay, give the fête the prestige of their patronage and the advantage of their co-operation.

THE following are the remarks made by H. R. H. the Commander-in-Chief about the review held at Poona before Prince Albert Victor:—

"His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, Bombay Army, desires to communicate to the Major-General Commanding, and the troops composing the Poona Division, his entire satisfaction with their appearance, and the steadiness and precision with which the movements were carried out at this morning's parade.

"2. His Royal Highness is much gratified that the first parade in India witnessed by his nephew, Prince Albert Victor of Wales, should have been composed of troops serving under his immediate command, and it affords him great pleasure to inform them that an excellent impression was made on the mind of his Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor of Wales in respect to the various arms of the services, including the Poona Volunteers, serving in this Presidency by his morning's inspection."

THE Mahratta papers condemn the Congress movement, which they say is conducted on this side of India by a few Brahmin agitators. They urge that before the Brahmins attempted to hold the reins of Government in their hands they must remove the hundred and one social, moral, and religious evils which degrade the natives in the eyes of the civilized nations of the world. The Dinbandhu, a Mahratta paper devoted to the interests of the working classes, writing upon the subject, says:—"The Congress is well-known now to be the assembly of a few agitators, mostly Brahmins; who, dissatisfied with the present state of things, perhaps long for their old Peshwai. Any expense incurred on account of such an assembly cannot legitimately be defrayed by Indian Princes and Sirdars, much less by the ryots, whose condition of life never, perhaps, enters the prolific brain of the Congresswalla." Another Mahratti paper, called Amhalhari, which is published in Poona, the chief seat of the Brahmins, says:—"We must clean the Augean stable of all social impurities before we spend our talents, energies, and substance in holding National Congresses." The paper further states:—"In order to make the Congress a success and a power in the land, we should endeavour, in the first place, to reform our homes, and remove social, moral, and religious evils; and then all the reforms which the National Congress aims at will follow without any effort on our part."

BURMA.

(Nov. 17.)

PREPARATIONS for the reception of the Prince at Rangoon are progressing satisfactorily. Subscriptions from Europeans alone will be about Rs. 2,500. The use of the municipal buildings has been granted for a grand ball, and they will be vacated immediately for repairs. The Prince has consented to inaugurate the new drainage works, and in the evening Messrs. Shone and Ault, the contractors, will illuminate the royal lakes and give a magnificent display of fireworks imported from England for the occasion. Burmese sports will be held on a grand scale, and the preparations for receiving the Prince will be exactly such as would have greeted the Burmese King under similar circumstances. The Chinese merchants have sent to China for special decorations.

IN Mandalay matters are not going so satisfactorily as in Rangoon. Subscriptions amount to about Rs. 8,000, and the Government grant to Rs. 2,000. In face of this the committee decided, by 39 to 24, that if Government refuse to increase the grant, it is undesirable that the Prince should visit Mandalay. The minority was composed of sixteen officers, eight non-official members.

ALLAHABAD.

(Nov. 19.)

THE Pioneer protests against the Congress tactics, and writes:—"We must really draw a line at the flood of telegrams now reaching us from Bombay purporting to come from Our Own Correspondent, which they certainly do not. The beginning of this flood, being synchronous with Mr. Hume's arrival in the Western presidency, is naturally suggestive, though of course he may have no connection with it. At any rate the public can afford to wait for details of the next demonstration till they reach us free from all suspicion of taint. The latest telegram, which informs us that the local opposition that at one time seemed to exist now appears to have almost, if not entirely vanished, is contradicted by the Indian Spectator as late as the 17th instant, and Mr. Malabari's news may safely be accepted for choice."

OBITUARY.

GENERAL J. S. PATON, C.B., on the Retired List, late Bengal S.C., died at 86, Oxford-gardens, W., on the 28th ult., aged 68 years. The deceased joined the Army June 12, 1837; became lieutenant, October 3, 1840; captain, February 8, 1851; brevet major, February 9, 1851; major, February 18, 1861; brevet lieutenant-colonel, November 28, 1854; lieutenant-colonel, June 12, 1863; colonel, November 28, 1857; major-general, October 29, 1866; lieutenant-general, October 7, 1874; and general, October 1, 1877. He served in the Gwalior Campaign, and was present at the battle of Maharajpore (bronze star); in the Sutlej Campaign of 1845-46, including the battles of Ferozeshah and Sobraon (medal with two clasps) and capture of Kota Kangra; in the Punjab Campaign of 1848-49, including the affair of Ramnuggur, passage of the Chenab, and battles of Sadoolapore and Chillianwallah (severely wounded, medal with clasp, and brevet of major); served with the expedition under Sir Charles Napier against the Afreedees in 1850, including the forcing of the Kohat Pass (medal with clasp); also with the force employed to suppress the Googaira insurrection 1857, and commanded the field detachment sent from Lahore, which was thrice engaged (medal).

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR HENRY D'O. TORRENS, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., died in London on the 1st inst. He was son of the late Mr. H. W. Torrens, Bengal C.S., and was born in 1833. He entered the Army September 18, 1849; became lieutenant, May 8, 1851; captain, September 21, 1854; major, June 6, 1856; lieutenant-colonel, April 26, 1859; colonel, April 27, 1864; major-general, August, 1, 1869; and lieutenant-general January 13, 1884. He served in the Eastern Campaign of 1854-55, including the battle of Inkermann (mentioned in despatches—wounded, and horse shot under him) and siege of Sebastopol and attacks on the Redan (medal with four clasps, brevet of major, Knight of the Legion of Honour, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). Served in the Indian Campaign of 1857-58, including the relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde; selected for the command of the rear-guard of the relieving army during its march from Lucknow to Cawnpore, after the relief of the Lucknow garrison; defeat of the Gwalior Contingent at Cawnpore, on December 6, 1857; operations across the Goomtee; siege and capture of Lucknow. Was assistant-adjutant-general H.M.'s Forces at Headquarters during the operations by Lord Clyde against the rebels in 1858-59, and was present at all the engagements of that campaign (medal with two clasps, and brevet of lieutenant-colonel). On Wednesday morning the remains of the deceased offices were interred with semi-military honours at Brompton Cemetery, in the presence of a large assemblage of past and present officers of the Army and personal friends, including many ladies. The body of his Excellency, enclosed in a polished oak coffin, was placed near the altar of the Royal Military Chapel, Wellington Barracks, at an early hour, when it was entirely covered with beautiful floral wreaths and crosses. A distinguished assembly was present in the chapel at 11 o'clock to take part in the funeral service. Among the officers present were Generals Sir A. Herbert, Sir G. Willis, Sir Archibald Alison, and Sir F. Maude; Colonel Lane, Rifle Brigade, A.D.C. to the Duke of Cambridge; Colonel Lynedoch Gardiner, and others. The service, which was conducted by the Rev. E. A. Chichester, Vicar of Dorking, assisted by the Rev. W. F. R. Buckle, Chaplain to the Forces, was most impressively rendered, the vocal and instrumental portions by the band of the Grenadier Guards, under 2nd Lieutenant Dan Godfrey. At the close of the service the wreaths and crosses were removed from the coffin, the Union Jack being substituted, and on it the General's cocked hat and sword were placed. Eight Guardsmen—the band meanwhile playing the Dead March in "Saul"—having conveyed the coffin to a gun-carriage, the cortege, escorted by a troop of the 12th Lancers, moved off to Brompton Cemetery, followed by a long line of carriages. On arrival at the cemetery the coffin was borne to the grave by soldiers of the Grenadier Guards, the pall-bearers being Admiral Sir E. Inglefield, Major-Generals Sir George Harman, Godfrey Clerk, and Moncrieff, and Director-General (A.M.S.) Mackinnon. The chief mourners were Captain Torrens (Scots Greys), Mr. Gerald Torrens, Mr. A. Torrens, Sir A. Kinloch, Mr. C. Stewart (Grenadier Guards), the Hon. R. O'Neil, M.P., Sir R. Anstruther, Colonel Howland Roberts, and Mr. A. Burdon. The coffin bore the following inscription:—"His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir Henry D'Oyly Torrens, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., Governor of Malta, aged 56 years." The event was observed at Malta by the firing of seventeen minute guns from the garrison batteries. At the Governor's palace at La Valetta, on the forts, the foreign Consulates, and the ships in harbour, flags were hoisted half-mast high. A General Order has been issued for all officers to wear mourning for one month. All the public offices and banks were closed in token of respect for the memory of the deceased Governor.

MAJOR-GENERAL H. DE R. PIGOTT, on the Retired List, late 19th and 70th Regiments, died at Elkhorn, Manitoba, on the 14th ult., aged 65 years. He was the second son of Captain Henry Pigott, 82nd Regiment, of Eagle Hill, county Galway. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and graduated a B.A. of that University in 1844, entering the Army as ensign in the 83rd Regiment in 1845. He was acting chief engineer in Scinde, under Sir Bartle Frere, on the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny, when he rejoined his regiment, and was present at the siege and capture of Awah, the siege and capture of Kotah, and the affair at Sanganeer (medal with clasp). He was appointed Judge-Advocate-General at Nusseerabad in 1858. He obtained his majority in the 2nd Battalion 19th Regiment in 1863, and became lieutenant-colonel 1st Battalion 19th Regiment in 1871, when he exchanged into the 70th Regiment, and was with it at Candahar during the Afghan War of 1878, under Sir M. Biddulph (mentioned in despatches, and medal). He commanded the Liverpool Regimental District in 1881. He retired in 1882, with the rank of major-general.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL F. L. HALEMAN, Madras S.C., Paymaster of the Pensioners in the Secunderabad District, while dancing with his niece at an "at home," given by the 5th Madras Infantry, fell down and expired almost immediately. The deceased joined the Army May 26, 1858; became lieutenant, April 16, 1860; captain, May 26, 1870; major, May 26, 1878; and lieutenant-colonel, July 10, 1888.

LIEUTENANT J. C. SWETE, Bengal S.C., 2nd Hyderabad Infantry, died at Fort Royal, Worcester, on the 1st instant, aged 30, from fever contracted on active service in Upper Burma. He was the eldest son of Dr. Swete, of Worcester, and joined the Army October 23, 1880, and became lieutenant, July 1, 1881, joining the Staff Corps from the Essex Regiment.

MAJOR CHARLES ROSS FRASER, who was for over thirteen years adjutant of the Inverness-shire Highland Rifle Volunteers, died in Inverness on the 27th ult., at the age of 67. The deceased, who had many years' Army service, was born at Fort George, of which his father, Major Andrew Fraser, of Flemington, was Governor for many years. He entered the 29th Madras Native Infantry as ensign in 1839, and served with that corps and the 4th Punjab and 2nd Bengal Cavalry down to 1857. He retired invalided in 1859, with the rank of major, and received the Frontier War medal and clasp. In 1860, soon after his return to Inverness, he was appointed adjutant of the Inverness-shire R.V.C., from which he retired in 1873.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SIX detachments of troops belonging to Punjab States will attend the Cavalry Camp-of-Exercise at Muridki. Pattiala sends 400, Faridkot forty, and Nabha, Jhind, Kapurthala, and Bahawalpur 150 each. The troops will rendezvous at Shahdera on the 20th January and proceed to Muridki on the 25th.

THE work of laying the field telegraph lines for the Chin-Lushai Expedition is making satisfactory progress, and permanent offices will be shortly opened at Lungleh, on the Chittagong side, and at Gungaw on the border of the Southern Chin country.

A THIRD small batch of the improved magazine rifles are at present in Fort William Arsenal, and these rifles have been tried by "The Buffs" at Dum-Dum and reported perfect. The rifles appeared to shoot a little to the left, but whether this was due to the arm itself or to a light wind which came from the right while the practice was going on is not stated. The extraction was all that could be desired in a military arm.

A VERY stringent order has been issued by Government regarding the issue of balled ammunition to Volunteers and return of the empty cases. It is believed that all over India there has been a sort of traffic in balled cartridges between unprincipled Volunteers and Natives, and the order referred to, if carried out stringently, will most effectually put a stop to the sale of ammunition obtained from Volunteer stores. No Volunteer is to be allowed to obtain more than thirty cartridges at one time, and he must return twenty-seven empty cases at least out of the thirty to show that they have been expended. Should he not return the empty cases he can get no more balled ammunition for private practice until the commencement of the next shooting season, but the commanding officer may allow a limited issue to be made to such a Volunteer on the rifle-range, provided it is expended in the presence of an officer or sergeant-instructor.

LUNCHEON TO SIR W. WEDDERBURN.

Sir William Wedderburn, Bart., who is about to proceed to India to assume the presidency of the Indian National Congress, the forthcoming session of which will be held in Bombay on December 26th and following days, was on Friday entertained at luncheon at the National Liberal Club by Mr. George Yule, the president of last year's Indian Congress, and a number of members of Parliament, and other friends of Indian reform, that they might show their esteem for him, their appreciation of the duty he had undertaken, and wish him good speed on his journey. Mr. George Yule, who presided, having stated that letters of apology for unavoidable absence had been received, among others, from the Marquis of Ripon and Sir George Trevelyan, gave the health of the Empress Queen, which was cordially drunk. In proposing the health of Sir W. Wedderburn, he said the movement in favour of Indian reform had no clan purposes in view. It had no party character about it either in its procedure or in its objects. It had drawn from the various parties into which English political life was divided warm supporters. It had, for example, Sir Richard Garth, ex-Chief Justice of Bengal, a good specimen of the old Tory, Mr. Bradlaugh, who was a good example of the advanced Liberal; and between these, moderate men of whom Sir W. Wedderburn might be taken as a type. The movement could in fact be supported by all classes of English politicians without them sacrificing in the smallest extent the principles they professed—(applause). The leaders of the movement wanted better laws for India, through better knowledge of the wants of the people, and he urged that this would best be achieved by the expansion of the Indian Legislative Council on a partially elective basis—(cheers). Sir W. Wedderburn, in responding, pointed out that the vast masses of India were altogether unrepresented, and had no voice in the administration of affairs. Indeed 200 millions of our Indian fellow-citizens all put together had not so much direct power in the management of Indian affairs as one single British elector had—(shame). The English people had always desired that the Indian people should have the same privileges as themselves, but we had committed a great sin of omission. We had not looked to the trust ourselves, but had blindly and wrongfully handed over the trust to our official agents in India. The professional interests of those agents were in direct antagonism to those whom we were bound to protect. In all countries the interests of the taxpayers were not identical with the interests of officials, and this was especially the case in India. There the interests of the people were peace, economy, and reform, and these were all distasteful to the civil and military clique which reigned at Simla. He did not blame these officials so much as the system which gave them uncontrolled power. There was practically no control whatever over the official Government of India, the result being grinding taxation and extreme poverty. So near did the people live to the verge of subsistence that the slightest scarcity brought upon them enormous suffering, and the result of the last famine was a loss of five million lives. By a conciliatory policy we might consolidate for many years the foundations of the British rule in India. He trusted that an Indian party would be formed in the House of Commons of men who—whatever might be their differences in other matters—were willing to co-operate upon a broad basis in a just and sympathetic policy towards the millions of that country—(cheers). The health of Mr. Yule, proposed by Sir W. W. Hunter, M.P., having been drunk, the company separated.

TRADE BETWEEN INDIA AND RUSSIA.

The native traders of India, says the Royal Engineer Journal, are quietly inaugurating a trade between Russia and India, which has already received the official recognition of the former. The Indo-Bokharan trade, which is of long standing, first came under the direct control of Russia by the annexation of Merv; and during the last few months this control has become more absolute by the occupation of Kerki and Kelif on the Oxus. What new arrangements have been made since the recent Bokharan mission to St. Petersburg have not transpired, but the probability is that the dues will be collected by Russian officials. Recent disturbances have blocked the old Cabul route, and the caravans have diverged via Candahar and Merv to the Transcaspian Railway—a line that is being developed and pushed to the utmost by the Russian Government. Once Native traders from India penetrated to the Transcaspian Railway, it was but natural that they should seek markets, not only in Bokhara, but also, by turning to the right towards the Caspian, establish the basis of a direct overland commercial intercourse between Russia and India. Recognising this, the Russian Government established two years ago an annual Central Asian fair at Baku, the great industrial centre of the Caspian, which has had the effect of drawing thither Native merchants from Tashkent, Bokhara, Afghanistan and Persia. Every year will show greater activity. For example, this year one of the Caspian steamship companies has launched five new steamers, and the only break existing in the railway systems of Europe and India is the few hundred miles between Quetta and Merv. By sea, as well as by land, the Russians and the Indian people are getting to know each other more and more without the intervention of the Englishman. Russian steamers now bring Indian tea direct from India to Odessa, and convey Russian kerosene from Batoum to Bombay for consumption by the Indian people. Russia is looking up the Indian market, and is trying to deal with it direct, instead of by way of London.

THE INDIAN CONGRESS.

In connection with the sittings of the Congress this month, the local committee of Bombay have issued the following as the

"BOMBAY LEAFLET."

1. What is the Indian National Congress?—It is an assembly which meets once a year to consider questions affecting the British Indian Empire as a whole, and is composed of members taken from all classes of the people inhabiting that Empire. It consists of Hindus, Mahomedans, Parsis, Eurasians, Europeans domiciled in India, and even some Europeans not domiciled in India. The institution is at present, of course, an infant institution, having been started only five years ago. The constitution of the Congress, in regard to the various classes of the Indian Community will, no doubt, undergo development and improvement in process of time. But for an infant institution it is sufficiently well constituted now, inasmuch as it embraces in its body many members of each section of the Indian people, who are in the habit of thinking about public affairs. Certain members of every one of such sections—Hindus not excepted—have urged more or less well-founded objections to the aims and modes of work of the Congress. In so far as such objections are well founded, the Congress is gradually making improvements so as to obviate them. In so far as they are ill-founded, efforts are being made to render the truth quite clear, and it is hoped that such efforts will be ultimately crowned with success.

2. What are the aims of the Congress? The aims of the Congress are of a very catholic character. The Congress desires sundry changes to be made in some of the actual methods of Indian administration, which changes, it is generally and reasonably believed, even by some men outside the Congress ranks, will be beneficial alike to the rulers and the ruled in this Empire. The first plank in the Congress platform is loyalty to British rule. The Congress is firmly persuaded that any such improvements as it seeks for in Indian administration can be successfully, and beneficially, worked, only under the hegemony of a nation like the British, at once powerful and liberal, capable of making Government an object alike of respect and affection. Holding this view, and knowing and sympathising with the principle of British rule to hold the balance even between all sections of the Indian community, the Congress only asks for changes which shall endure for the benefit of all alike—Hindus, Mahomedans, Parsis, Eurasians, Europeans—and which shall enable Government to keep touch more satisfactorily than heretofore with its subjects. It asks for a Reform of Legislative Councils by introducing the beginning of a representative element into them, and by enabling them to advise the executive on financial matters. It asks for changes in the mode of admission into Her Majesty's Indian Civil Service; it asks for the development and extension of education both liberal and technical; it asks for the lightening of the Income Tax on the poorer classes, and the lightening of the Salt Tax which weighs heavily on those classes. It asks for a modification of the Arms Act in the interests of the peasants in the country districts; it seeks for changes in the Police Department, and in some of the prevailing rules regarding the administration of Criminal Justice, which must benefit alike all classes of Her Majesty's subjects, and especially afford relief to the poor and helpless among them. In one word, the aim of the Congress is to invite Government to make changes which will make British rule even more broad-based upon the people's will than it is at present.

3. The Methods of the Congress.—For the purposes above alluded to the Congress meets once a year at important places in the Empire. It has met already at Bombay, Calcutta Madras, and Allahabad, and is now again to meet in Bombay next December. At these meetings endeavours are made to get together thoughtful people taking interest in public affairs to discuss important Indian questions from their several points of view. As subsidiary to this—but as a most important point in itself—efforts have been commenced to organise associations at different centres throughout each Presidency, from which political information may spread among the people, and which may be affiliated to the central organisation of the Congress, directly or indirectly. An agency has also been established in England for the purpose of conveying information on Indian topics to the people of England, and for the purpose of getting the authorities in England to set right or investigate any mistakes that may be made by the local authorities here. That agency is working energetically, and within the last few months the attention of the Parliament and people of England has been attracted to many Indian questions through its instrumentality.

4. Many people ask: what have been the results of the Congress?—They must remember that five years are as a mere minute in the life of a nation, and that in such work as the Congress has undertaken tangible results cannot be achieved in five or ten years. Yet the Congress has done this. It has brought together large numbers of intelligent Indian gentlemen, who have learnt to know and to like and respect each other. This is no small gain. It has commenced on a scale not to be despised, the breaking down of interprovincial misunderstandings and jealousies. It has enabled many of our countrymen to see for themselves something, however little, of other provinces and people than their own. It has settled a definite and tangible Programme of Indian Administrative Reform. In England it has attracted more prominently than before the attention of English statesmen and politicians, and of Englishmen generally to Indian affairs and Indian aspirations. The sympathies of such men as Mr. Gladstone, the late Premier of England, constitute a very important element of success. And Mr. Caine, Sir W. Wedderburn, Sir William Hunter, and others have also expressed their sympathies in no unmistakable terms. Such men as Mr. Maclean and Sir L. Griffin may villify the Congress. But even their villifications, and those of the English public organs which echo their views, can do the Indian interests no harm. They may do good in drawing attention to the Congress movement, and then we can safely trust to the sense of justice and the generosity of the British Nation.

5. Lastly, what does the Congress need?—The Congress needs first a complete organisation over the whole Empire by means of which people taking part or interest in public affairs everywhere may obtain information, and may spread political knowledge and information. The responsibility of such organisations is very great. They must perform their functions without any of those indiscretions, which in most cases undeservedly draw upon us the charge of disloyalty to British rule. The very first essential of success in this work is a feeling of loyalty to British rule strongly felt and emphatically expressed whenever the occasion calls for it. The Congress also needs funds. The work of the Agency in England entails a good deal of expenditure, including among other things charges for printing papers, pamphlets, statements, letters, &c., also for communications with this country from time to time, and for the distribution of reports of Congress proceedings. In this country itself expense has to be incurred for the preparation and distribution of leaflets and other papers, and in the Presidency where the Congress is to be held, for the reception of delegates, and other arrangements for the Congress. This year in Bombay it is estimated that the expenditure will amount to fully Rs. 50,000, and this must be raised throughout the Bombay Presidency. The City of Bombay must contribute handsomely, of course, and the rest of the Presidency also must bear its due share of the expenditure. Rs. 50,000 is but a small sum for the whole Presidency if each one of us only does his duty.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

STORIES JOLLY, STORIES NEW, STORIES STRANGE, AND STORIES TRUE.*

This charming collection of stories merits, and, it may be trusted, will secure, a wide circulation. It is the custom—or, at any rate, there are not wanting numerous instances in that direction—to suppose that anything and everything will do for our young folk; but some at least will cling to the view that it is as regards the rising generation that most care is needed in the selection of tales. It would be difficult to overestimate the harm which may be inconsiderately done by placing in the hands of little minds tales utterly unfit for their limited intellects; and, worse still, it may be entirely unworthy of a place on the shelf of the right-minded youth of the land. Who does not remember the amusing, but withal instructive, tale in the "Buchholtz Family," which proclaims how worthy parents invited their friends and acquaintances to some amateur theatricals, and found, to their astonishment and horror, that the scenes were anything but proper, and the language placed in the mouths of the actors entirely unsuited for right-minded children; and yet, withal, the book which supplied the drama was specially designed for juvenile performers!

The public need fear no such mishap as regards this volume, in which there is not a single syllable calculated to raise a blush or even occasion a passing moment of anxiety to an anxious mother. Far otherwise; there is as a rule a maxim for good beneath the surface of what is calculated to amuse. A reviewer may well feel the fullest confidence in recommending this most admirable collection of tales. We have read them with pleasure, albeit they were primarily written for young people, and we much hope their success will be commensurate with their merit.

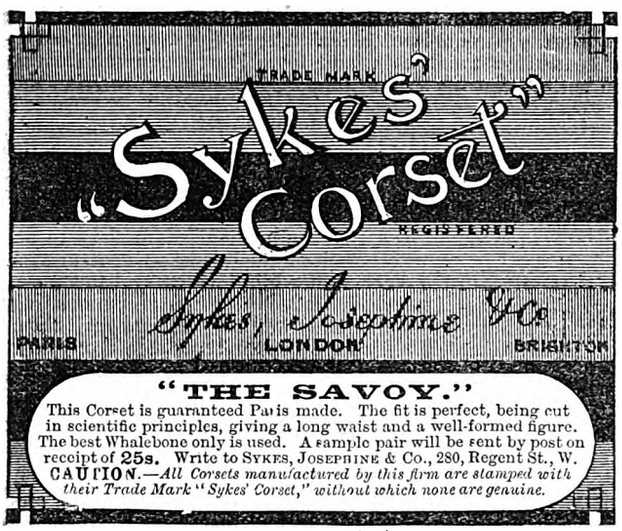
PEPIN: THE DANCING BEAR.*



The story of the Dancing Bear, charming in itself, is the more attractive in that it is prettily told, and effectively illustrated. But, apart from all other considerations, it merits a word of approbation, because it inculcates a love of animals, and impresses upon the youthful reader that kindness to God's dumb creatures is a trait which merits, and for the most part receives, the approval of all who wish our young children to be not only courteous, but kind even to the humblest creatures in nature's beautiful world.

IT is not a little interesting to learn that the credit of successfully solving one of the mysteries of medical science is due to the enlightened initiative and support of a Native Prince of India. The question to be settled was as to the exact action of chloroform on patients to whom it is administered. Ever since that drug was first applied to alleviate pain there have been instances, from time to time, in which the persons inhaling if have died, and the theory hitherto accepted has been that such deaths were due to disease of the heart, upon which the chloroform was supposed to act with a fatal effect. A year ago the Nizam of Hyderabad appointed a Scientific Commission to investigate the subject, the Commissioners, consisting of four medical men of eminence, being charged by the Nizam to ascertain in what way chloroform causes death. Nearly three hundred experiments were made upon dogs and monkeys, and the result, according to the official report, has been to show that chloroform does not affect the heart at all. The Commissioners state that "the inhalation of chloroform vapour, no matter in what doses or in what manner carried out, cannot kill a dog by acting directly on the heart," and may therefore safely be given whenever a painful surgical operation has to be performed. Patients who have died under chloroform have not died of heart disease, but solely through their breathing apparatus being affected; and the Nizam's Commission assure us that, now this fact is known, the doctors will in future always be able to intervene in time to prevent fatal consequences. This conclusion entirely upsets the hitherto received notions on the subject; but, if confirmed, it will be none the less welcome that we owe it to the liberality of a Native Prince of India.—Standard.

THERE is, says the Bombay Gazette, a very proper rule in the service that Government officials shall not become directors of public companies. Does this order apply to an officer on furlough? The authorities apparently have no hesitation on the subject, for according to a report that comes to us from England by the mail, the attention of Viscount Cross has been called by the Government of India to the case of an officer of the Royal Engineers and high up in the service who is at present on the board of an important commercial undertaking not altogether unconnected with this country. It was believed in London that the Secretary of State completely acquiesced in the views expressed in high quarters on this side, and that the officer in question would shortly receive an intimation that he must either send his papers or surrender his directorship. We have abstained from mentioning names. But there is no real necessity for secrecy. The officer we allude to is Colonel A. J. Filgate, R.E., Accountant-General of the Public Works Department, who is devoting his furlough to looking after the affairs of the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway Company. He may possibly try to shelter himself behind another and more important official recently retired, who while still in the service became a director of at least one public company.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE COMMAND-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA.

As the time draws near when, under the five years' rule of tenure of office, Sir Frederick Roberts will have to lay down his command, his friends are beginning a little agitation in his favour by suggesting that in his case an exception should be made in the rule, and that he should be allowed a prolongation of his present high and important charge. As was natural, the first notes of agitation came from very near Simla. The Civil and Military Gazette, published at Lahore, gives a long leader to the subject, and brings forward several arguments in support of the view that his Excellency should be given an extension of office. The first of these arguments will probably strike most military men as a curious one. "It is generally acknowledged," says our Indian contemporary, "that Sir Frederick Roberts has not been rewarded for his services in proportion to former commanders of armies in the field." Indeed? If it be remembered that the gallant "Bobs"—a deservedly popular officer, who has shown splendid fighting qualities—had, before he got superior commands, many years' experience of the sweets of Staff employ, and very little of the drudgery of regimental duty (he never, we believe, did service even as a captain with garrison or field battery)—that on being appointed at Lord Lytton's desire to a command in the Afghan campaign—his way to honours and promotion and the "pecuniary reward of valour"—which Parliament now votes to successful generals, has been made very smooth for him. He has been created a baronet; and when he returns to England, after holding the most coveted command in the British army, he will no doubt be raised to the peerage. We think that these are no small rewards, and to them may be added what one of his enthusiastic admirers wrote:—"He has been received by Her Majesty, and has had the honour of dining with the Lord Mayor." We yield to no one in our appreciation of the excellent services which Sir Frederick Roberts has rendered to his country, and of the good in the way of military reforms which he has been carrying out in India; but we fail to see that his merits have not also been well recognised by the State. "Sir Frederick Roberts," continues our contemporary, "possesses the qualities of a great commander; among them that principal one of securing the attachment and confidence of his troops." But, allowing all this, we would venture to ask, Has England no other officers of whom the same could be said? Is the dictum, which has been advanced before, and which made us the laughing-stock of the Continental nations, to be advanced again, that the British army has only two generals fitted for supreme command—one in England, Lord Wolseley, and one in India, Sir Frederick Roberts? The Civil and Military Gazette seems to hold this opinion, for after much gush regarding General Roberts's military genius, which takes the writer "back to the early days of Frederick the Great," we are told that:—

"This reputation, then, is a good and sufficient reason for leaving this tried and approved officer in command of an army which he knows, and which knows and trusts him, at a time when there is every prospect of the employment of that army in the field. A further reason is that Sir Frederick Roberts has done, and is doing, more for the welfare and efficiency of that army, and for the defence of the Empire, than any Commander-in-Chief has ever done before, or is likely hereafter to have the knowledge and prestige to enable him to accomplish. He should be left to complete his task. Very much has yet to be done for the organisation of the troops of the Native States to co-operate with the regular forces. The organisation of the Christian community in India for the purpose of self-defence is as yet little beyond the stage of discussion. The arrangements for the safeguard of strategic points, and for completion of military communications, are certainly far advanced; but the organisation of a system of transport is still very incomplete. Much has been done for the training of the troops in combined operations, and for the improvement of their shooting, but much still remains to be done, especially for the mounted branch of the army. For the comfort and efficiency of the soldiers, for the location of Europeans in the hills, and thus keeping them fit for active service, for the improvement of their sobriety and health, Sir Frederick Roberts has already achieved what will leave his name a household word among them; and it would be prudent to let him remain and carry out his reforms to completion."

Comparisons, which the proverb says are odious, are sometimes also difficult to make. If Sir Frederick Roberts has exceeded in doing more for the safety of the Indian Empire and for the welfare of the Indian armies than all his predecessors, it might be said that he has had opportunities which they never possessed; but to add that he will excel all commanders that may come after him is surely carrying out the principles of the Mutual Admiration Society—which, perhaps, still has a home at military headquarters in India—a little too far?

The paper from which we have quoted appears to have had a relapse of its old malady—Russia on the brain. It thinks that war with that country and England may break out at any moment, and then "it must be most undesirable to have at the head of the Indian forces an untried officer, even though he be a Prince of the Blood Royal." The possibility that the Duke of Connaught may succeed to the coming vacancy is one which greatly disturbs the writer's equanimity; and in concluding his article he declares that such an appointment would not only be "improper," but "intolerable"—for "the day ought to have passed for postponing the public weal to personal considerations." Exactly so; "personal considerations" have been allowed to stand too long in the way of promotion to higher commands of deserving officers fully fitted for them, but who have been allowed to remain in obscurity, or been forced into compulsory retirement, with hearts bowed down by the sickness of honourable hopes deferred.

THE Income-tax collections in Bengal for 1888-89 were two and three quarter lakhs more than in the previous year. This is largely due to the increased amount collected in Calcutta. The Board of Revenue reports that there is nothing new to be said about the public attitude towards the tax. It is undoubtedly unpopular, but there is not much grumbling. Mr. Kilby is complimented on his work as Collector.

THE missing link of the Lucknow-Philibit Railway, which the Rohilkund and Kumaon Company have contracted with the Secretary of State to complete, is, thanks to the Local Government having advanced a lakh of rupees for immediate needs, to be put in hand immediately. The rails and girders have already been ordered from home. The Company's Agents trust to have the whole fifty-seven miles finished by next rains, which would be smart work.

THE STATE BALL.

On the night of Nov. 20 a State Ball was given by his Excellency Governor and Lady Reay in honour of H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor, and everything connected with it passed off with éclat. The weather was simply "Queen's weather," clear and bright by starlight, and a great portion of the route from Magdala House to Guneshkhind was illuminated by loyal corporations and loyal citizens. From the Duke's residence to the Sangum the way was lighted up brilliantly, which was very creditable to the branch of the Royal Reception Committee, which had charge of it. Government House looked grand under its illuminations. Lights shone in approaches and walks, and sparkled in thousands all over the fine building, the general effect being finished off by the beautiful lighting of the tower. The ball-room looked resplendent from the volume of light thrown on it, and the floor was perfect enough to please the most fastidious of waltzers.

H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor dined at Magdala House, and after dinner the Royal party left for Guneshkhind, where they arrived a little after 10 o'clock, being received by Lady Reay and H.E. the Governor, the band playing the Prince of Wales. The ball was opened immediately after, and in the opening Royal Quadrille H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor danced with Lady Reay, his Excellency the Governor with H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught, and H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught with Mrs. Solly-Flood. The toilettes of the ladies were superb. H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught in a yellow costume looked charming, the dress being set off with diamond ornamentations, the Jubilee Medal, and several Orders. Lady Reay looked beautiful in a splendid costume, and wore a fine tiara of diamonds and necklace of the same. Lady Claud Hamilton was dressed in yellow, and was much admired. She wore a tiara of diamonds on her hair with diamond ornament. The costumes worn by Mrs. Lindsay, Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Foster, Miss Solly-Flood, Hon. Mrs. Lyttelton. Mrs. Cavaye, Mrs. Stockinger, and Mrs. Tidy were about the best, and attracted much attention. The Hon. Mrs. Greville in a black dress looked superb, and the costume was particularly noticed as one of the finest.

H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor (Prince Eddie, as he is more familiarly known in Court circles) wore the Mess Dress of the 10th Hussars. H.E. the Governor was in ordinary evening dress, and H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught wore the uniform of a General Officer.

The following was the programme of the dances:—

1. Quadrille ..... La Fille de Madame Angot.
2. Valse ..... Uber Land and Meer.
3. Lancers ..... The Connaught.
4. Valse ..... Tanzjubilantan.
5. Polka ..... En Garde.
6. Valse ..... Bitter-Sweet.
7. Gallop ..... Silvester.
8. Valse ..... Lovely Eyes.

Supper } 1 Valse ..... Love's Dreamland.
Dances } 2 Valse ..... Swinging.

9. Lancers ..... They all love Jack.
10. Valse ..... All in a Garden Fair.
11. Highland Scottische ..... Keel Row.
12. Valse ..... Les Mysteres du Cœur.
13. Polka ..... Merry Footsteps.
14. Gallop ..... Encore.
15. Valse ..... Ruddigore.
16. Valse ..... Sur les Flota Bleus.

At midnight an adjournment was made to the banquetting room, where an excellent supper was provided and done justice to. The menu was as follows:—

MENU.

T.R.H. the Duke and Duchess of Connaught left shortly after supper, at about 1 A.M., but it was not until 3 A.M. that the ball closed, dancing being kept up with vigour until that hour, and before many of the guests had returned to their homes dawn had broken.

His Excellency the Governor's band, under the able direction of Herr Zimmer, played during the night.

BRIGADE-SURGEON LANGLEY, retired from the service, does not propose either to leave Bombay or to abandon his practice there. Dr. Langley served in the China Campaign of 1860-62, during the Taeping rebellion, and was in several actions, receiving in the shape of the China medal and clasp a well-merited reward for many courageous acts on the field of battle. During his residence in Bombay he has earned the warm regard of rich and poor alike, and both are alike delighted to learn that he still remains amongst them.

THE Times of India says:—"A printed document addressed to all Bombay Civilians of over ten years' standing, urging them to memorialise the Secretary of State on behalf of the peccant mamlatdars is now being circulated. It is difficult to imagine that any civilian, not of ten years' but of six months' standing, would be guilty of so incredible an act of folly. The Secretary of State has ordered certain men to be dismissed from the service. The members of the Bombay Civil Service, a service which has had for the past century a splendid reputation for a keen sense of honour and a spotless integrity, are asked to memorialise the Secretary of State on behalf of these men, after the Viceroy, to whom every servant of the State owes official allegiance, has said in open Council: 'It appears to me that those who contend that the conduct of which these dismissed officials have been guilty is not conduct deserving of serious reprobation, or calculated to unfit them for the discharge of important judicial and administrative functions, are striking a serious blow at the standard of public morality in this country.' The strict sense of discipline which has always pervaded all ranks of the Indian Civil Service is one of the safeguards of the Empire. It would be entirely destructive of this discipline if bodies of public servants were to take to memorialising against the policy of their rulers. The dismissal of the mamlatdars was an act of State done after anxious and mature deliberation. Lord Reay and the members of the Government must be aware of the existence of this pernicious circular, and it would be interesting to know what action they intend to take in the matter.'

ASTHMA CURED.

No matter of how long standing, or how severe, by DR. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE; Price 4/6 and 10/- of Chemists; or free by Parcels Post from us.

Our illustrated book, "ASTHMA, ITS TREATMENT AND CURE," by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., &c., will be sent post free by us.

MRS. FLORENCE STONE, Montague Villa, Queen's Road, High Wycombe, says:—

"I have received great benefit from taking Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. For many months I have had an attack come on four nights out of seven, and lately in the day time as well; but since taking your medicine I have only had one slight attack in a month."

MRS. MARY PRICE, Gronant, near Holywell, says:—

"I had suffered for four years with Asthma. I have been now nine months without any attack. I have been cured by Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. I can never praise it enough."

The Parents' Cabinet of Amusement and Instruction.

BY

MARTHA HILL and FRIENDS.

NEW EDITION.

EDITED BY

CONSTANCE HILL.

The School Board Chronicle says:—"It is a library of bright, lively, wholesome reading in short pieces—about twenty separate tales, fables, poems, articles, and sketches to the volume. Now that the work has been so handsomely and happily revised, no school library will be quite what it should be without it."

The Guardian says:—"We hope that the children of the present generation will welcome, as we remember doing, 'The Parents' Cabinet.' So much did we love the book that the sight is a real refreshment."

The Englishwoman's Review says:—"The work will be prized, we believe, by a new circle of readers for its own sake, as well as by those who re-read it to recall the impressions of their childhood."

The Scotsman says:—"All the articles are written in popular language, being well brought within the capacity of those for whom the work has been compiled. . . . Will prove one of the most popular productions of the season for the rising generation."

The Daily News says:—"Each book is complete in itself, in token of which the order is indicated, not by figures, but by stars. . . . . Mrs. Hill was the inventor of this convenient method. . . . May be separated without assuming the appearance of odd volumes."

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him ! ! I know him not ! ! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him ; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge ! !"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain ?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset ! ! ! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion ; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end ; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is : "I will wait and see ; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow ;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death ?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health ; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham !—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic ; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk) ; you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver ; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armie, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying —"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

OPINIONS.

he Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 28, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 29th Nov.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 27th Nov.; and from Calcutta to the 27th Nov.

A DURBAR was held at Quetta on 22nd Nov., at which the Khan of Kelat and the headmen of the various local tribes were present. The Viceroy, in the course of a long speech, dwelt upon the great advantages which Biluchistan had gained by coming under British rule, and expressed the confidence felt by the Government in the loyalty of its chiefs and people. After witnessing military operations on the frontier Lord and Lady Lansdowne left for Lahore.

ON 25th Nov. Lady Lansdowne laid the foundation-stone of a female students' boarding house to be erected in connection with the Aitchison Hospital at Lahore. The Viceroy, who with Sir James and Lady Lyall and a large company, witnessed the ceremony, replied to an address presented by the Lady Dufferin Fund Committee, and expressed the pleasure which it gave Lady Lansdowne to forward the work of the fund.

THE appointment of Lord Harris in succession to Lord Reay has been favourably received by the Bombay Press.

MR. C. A. DANIELL, B.C.S., is retiring from the service. He was entertained at a farewell dinner in the N.W.P. Club.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SYMONS has arrived at Pokoko on the Irrawaddy, and assumed command of the Chin Expeditionary Force. The Southern Column of the Force began its march from Pokoko, on the Irrawaddy, to Gangaw on Nov. 23. The plan of operations is to march upon Haka, and to effect a junction there, if possible, with the force from the Chittagong side; then to occupy the principal village of the Tashon Chins, with or without opposition; and, finally, to return by a new route south-eastwards back to Gangaw. A mule-track will be made from the latter place to Haka, and a line of posts established along it. The Survey officers with the force will also reconnoitre the country with a view to aligning the eastern section of the future grand trunk road between Burma and Eastern Bengal.

THE English members of the Anglo Siam Commission are assembling at Meiktila station, on the Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway, whence they will march eastwards to Fort Steadman, in the Shan country.

THE vacancy which will be created in the N.W.P. Board of Revenue by Mr. J. C. Robertson's retirement at the end of January next has been offered to Mr. J. R. Reid, late Secretary to the North West Provinces Government, now at home on furlough. In the event of Mr. Reid being unable to accept the offer the succession will go to Mr. W. Kaye, at present Commissioner of Bareilly.

AS it is not yet settled whether Colonel Harrison, at present officiating as Chief Engineer with the Government of Bengal, will shortly take leave, the permanent successor to Colonel Forbes in the North-West Provinces is yet uncertain; but, contrary to expectation, Colonel McNeile, Chief Engineer in Bengal, who is now on furlough, has decided to return to India—a fact which will of course effect the result, unless, as is not improbable, Colonel Harrison goes on leave.

COLONEL T. A. COOKE, District Staff Officer, Umballa, has been appointed to succeed Colonel Bushman as 1st Assistant Adjutant-General at Army Headquarters, Simla.

COLONEL KENNETH MACKENZIE has declined the East African Company's offer of a Governor's post at Mombassa, and will stick to his appointment of Judicial Commissioner in Berar.

LORD AVA is laid up at Lucknow with a fractured jaw, caused by the kick of a pony, but is doing well.

SURGEON-MAJOR SHIRLEY DEAKIN, well-known in the N.W. Provinces a few years ago as one of the most skilful surgeons in the Indian Medical Service, died recently at Jhelum from enteric fever.

A RISING has occurred among the Kols of Chota Nagpur, who are reported to have burned down some zemindari cutcherries and killed a number of persons. They are said to demand remission of rents and the abolition of forced labour, which has been exacted from them by their Chiefs from tmie immemorial. The Kols are an aboriginal race, scattered among the Chota Nagpur and Central Provinces hills, and number about a million souls.

THE case of defamation brought by Mr. Andrew Hearsey against the editor and printer of the Pioneer was dismissed on the 22nd Nov. by Mr. G. M. Currie, Magistrate of Howrah, on the same grounds that led to a similar result in the Calcutta High Court.

THE railway bridge over the Oxus at Charjui, which was broken by the spring floods, was reopened for traffic on October 22nd. Trains can now be run again uninterruptedly by the Russians from the Caspian to Samarkand.

ANOTHER calamity has befallen the unfortunate district of Ganjam. There has been an abnormally heavy fall of rain, sixteen inches being recorded in three days, and the country is now flooded. The crops will suffer terribly, and relief operations will inevitably have to be reopened.

THE heavy rain of last week in the East Coast districts has done much damage in Orissa as well as in Ganjam. The paddy-fields have been flooded, and the autumn and winter crops partially destroyed. Cholera has also increased, and a period of scarcity and pestilence seems about to set in.

THREE candidates are in the field for the Registrarship of the Bombay University, the election for which will take place on the 14th December. They are Dr. Peterson, the present Registar; Dr. Macdonald, and Mr. Hathornthwaite.

THE Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris has opened agencies in Bombay and in Calcutta. The reconstituted Comptoir will undertake exchange business on the same scale as the old Bank. Mr. Castelli is the manager of the Bombay branch.

MR. CLAUDE VINCENT, late acting Private Secretary to the Governor of Madras, joins the Public Works Secretariat at Calcutta.

THE MAHARANA OF DHOLEPORE has met with rather a bad accident by a fall from his horse.

IT is probable that the great Burdwan Case, which is now the subject of a Commission sitting at Lahore, may be settled by a compromise.

UNDER orders from the Board of Directors in England, the Traffic Manager of the East Indian Railway and his office are to be transferred from Jamalpur to Calcutta, the change taking place from 1st January next.

MR. WALTON, Chief Engineer of the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, has been specially deputed to Bengal to inquire into and report on the origin of the late accident to the piers of the Jyntee Bridge on the East Indian Railway, which is the subject of considerable difference of opinion among experts.

IT will be remembered that the failure of these piers all but led to an ugly disaster to the mail train from Calcutta.

NOTES.

THE arrival of two mails from India in the same week will be a matter of congratulation or complaint according as different natures of Anglo-Indians feel towards the alternate displays of tardiness and expedition made by our old and respected friend the P. and O. This, however, may be said, which, perhaps, may satisfy both parties—the present mail brings little news of interest which has not been already given to us by wire. Prince Albert Victor and his surroundings on tour continue to be the absorbing topic of interest in all the Anglo-Indian papers to hand.

HE wins popularity, as of course a prince ought to do, wherever he goes. But he has not been in the imminent danger of death from a ferocious elephant which Reuter's or some other telegraphic agency led the public of England to understand. The animal was a female elephant, and although for the moment she showed something of the temper of the female sex when they cannot have their own way, we are glad to learn that she really had no serious evil intentions against the Prince, although, according to one report we publish, H.R.H. "took fright and ran." His Royal Highness, if he did so, displayed a discretion in no way incommensurate with valour. Flight is the best tactical way of meeting any charge of an angry female of whatever animal classification.

THE appointment of Lord Harris to the Governorship of Bombay in succession to Lord Reay appears to have given general satisfaction in the Western Presidency, judging from the comments both in the English and in the vernacular newspapers. The Times of India "chortles in its joy" over it. "A better choice," says the Editor, "could hardly have been made. An accomplished man of the world, a clever speaker, a genial companion, and a diplomatist of excellent official training, he is just the man to restore to Bombay the sense of cohesion which in some mysterious manner she seems lately to have lost. Lord Harris is a man of tact, as well as of that multiform quality which Emerson, for want of a better word, calls 'grasp,' and of all the attributes of Presidency rulership in this country there are none more necessary than these. The ideal Governor is one who recognises instinctively the social nuances in the tract over which he presides, who can deal with opposing factions without earning the hatred of any, who can say 'no' as pleasantly as most people say 'yes,' and who has enough of what the modern novelists call personal magnetism to draw all sections of the people towards himself."

BESIDES all this, the readers of the Bombay journal are told that "Lord Harris is a man of tall and agreeable presence, courteous after the old-fashioned style rather than after the less agreeable, if more familiar, fashion of to-day, but of unfailing geniality and savoir faire. He is a cricketer of honourable record; married the second daughter of the third Viscount St. Vincent; has been Under-Secretary of State for War, and Captain of the East Kent Yeomanry Cavalry." What more could the Editor say, unless as a neat finish he plagiarised from the old epitaph, and concluded "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven"?

THE same journal is hardly less gushing over Mr. Seymour King, M.P., whom the Uncovenanted Service entertained at dinner to show their sense of gratitude for past favours and for favours to come. Mr. King, we are told, restored the "lost art of oratory" in the land—whether of the island of Bombay, or of the continent of India, the writer does not say. But "it was a novel pleasure to hear at the Town Hall a speech delivered as speeches are delivered by the best speakers in the House of Commons. The matter was as good as the delivery."

BUT, unfortunately, perfection of oratory failed to secure perfection of harmony. Mr. King had hardly got into the full swing of his eloquent denunciation of his opponents, especially of Sir John Gorst as the representative of the India Office, when "the Hon. Mr. Justice Parsons rose and said he could not permit the Government to be speken of in that way without protesting. (Cries of Order! Order! Sit down!) Since they were against him he would retire." And he did so; whereupon Mr. King collapsed, and sat down, refusing to turn on the tap of eloquence again until the Hon. Mr. Justice Scott apologised for his too sensitive colleague having interupted "one of the most eloquent speeches I ever heard." This mollified Mr. King, who then proceeded to restore the long-lost art of oratory to his listeners.

THE Hon. Mr. Justice Parsons acted with more feeling than discretion in his zeal for the honour of Government; but he was actuated by, perhaps, a similar sentiment to that which made the "gentleman" of society in an old, but still unforgotten, novel exclaim:—"I have heard my King derided, and my God blasphemed; but I cannot remain to hear the British aristocracy sneered at." And he very properly left the room. But Mr. Parsons had done wiser if he had stayed. Mr. King's tirade against the Government was not such a terrible indictment after all, and there was much in it that was true, if not new.

THE Pioneer thus welcomes two intending visitors to India:—"Mr. Caine and Mr. Samuel Smith we have had with us; they have cursed the opium traffic, and nobody but a few fanatics have been influenced; and now we are to have Canon Wilberforce and Lord Radstock. They come out to India with the blessing of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic, whereof a meeting was called three weeks ago 'for the purpose of commending to the Lord's guidance and blessing Lord Radstock and the Rev. Canon Wiberforce during their visit to India.' We have no desire to accuse the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Traffic of cant; but we hope the gentlemen who have obtained its blessing will not also bring to India its prepossessions."

"BILL BERESFORD" is a man of many friends, and deserves his popularity, but it will be difficult for the staunchest of his friends to defend his retention in the Indian Military Secretaryship until he can rejoin the 9th Lancers as second in command—an arrangement which a military contemporary last week comments upon as follows:—"Fourteen years ago Lord William Beresford joined the personal staff of the Viceroy of India, and he has been on the staff ever since, although he has most improperly been allowed, while retaining his appointment, to take part in three campaigns, not to speak of the Viceregal picnic up the Irrawaddy, for which he received a clasp and brevet. Previously he served for eight and a half years as a subaltern in the regiment which he is now rejoining as second in command. The arrangement is preposterous; although according to one writer 'it fits in nicely,' and 'no absolute injury is done to the public service.' What a sad thing it is that a man, presumably a military man, can be found to use the words we have quoted in reference to a flagrant piece of jobbery such as can be exposed in a very few words. What is a second in command? Is he not an officer upon whom the command should devolve, on emergency at a moment's notice, without detriment to the efficiency of the corps or its fitness for active service? And can any man have the hardihood to assert that eight and a half years' service as a subaltern, and fourteen years on the Personal Staff, is a fit preparation for such a responsibility? If it is the sooner the regimental organisation of our cavalry is established on a different and more economical footing the better."

SIR ALFRED SLADE is still, we regret to hear, very unwell at his house in Grosvenor-gardens. His illness threatens to be a long though not a dangerous one, being a complication of gout and the effects of a jungle-fever contracted years ago in India.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

NATIVE STATES.

(Bengal Times.)

It is said that one cannot be too cautious in placing reliance on any information that comes from Native States. Its cause is not far to seek. With a few honourable exceptions, Native States are divided into factions, of which the outer world is hardly cognizant, and we should have found it hard to believe in such a state of affairs, but that two or three cases in point have fallen under our immediate notice, which have confirmed our suspicions. In one we were told that a Feudatory Prince (since deceased) was so very much cowed by a Political Resident that his life was a burden to him, and that he dared not move a finger without orders from that official; in fact, things had gone to such extremities that he did not even presume to venture out for a drive of an evening unless in company of "Major Saheb." We thought this rather strange; nevertheless, we prosecuted inquiries, and came to learn its cause. It seems this particular Maharajah was a weak man, and, consequenctly, a tool in his courtiers' hands. He was surrounded by a motley crew representing all grades of ruffianism and licentiousness. They had, and used to have till he died, complete control over him, and he was reduced to a mere cipher in governing his own territory. Advantage was then taken of this by other parties, and several cliques had formed, each bent on its own aggrandisement, irrespective of public welfare, of State requirements, or of its ruler. Anonymous letters were addressed to the Maharajah, threatening assassination, and this made him so miserable that in his bewilderment he addressed the Political Resident to take him under his protection. It was thus we understood why he appeared with "Major Saheb." It was under a belief that this Political's presence would awe his would-be assassin, and this little fact was distorted into abject submission to that officer. We have so often protested against this kind of criticism, and our Anglo-Indian contemporaries have so invariably supported us, without making any impression upon Native writers, that we give up our task in utter despair of being able to instil into Native publicists any notion of journalistic responsibility. When we see persistent attacks made upon men we have been taught to respect and honour for their uniform consistency and uprightness of character and conduct, assaults upon them by irresponsible writers glide harmlessly off their victims; and we feel more than ever tempted to advocate a Press Act that will tend to bring into more symmetry, among all classes of journalists, that freedom of expression between which and scurrilous license a wide line of demarcation shall be drawn. To see a head and hit it is the invariable rule of Native Press criticism, and the harder these poor feeble mites can hit, that is, the more they can abuse, the greater the value they appear to attach to what they suppose is independence. There must come a time when Government, for its own reputation's sake, will be compelled to put an end to all this irresponsible abuse.

IN AN INDIAN CITY.

THE PUNDIT.

(Indian Statesman.)

Behind that mass of dark feathery tamarind and glistening peepul shoots into the sky the gold-tipped pinnacle of the temple of Mahadeo. So closely have the branches grown overhead that all day long no glare of sunlight falls on its walls, only the trembling lights that have crept in and out of laced branches and moving leaves.

The old man who was coming down the stone steps, putting one foot first sideways and then helping himself further with a stick, is its Pundit, old Atma Ram. Day after day for more than fifty years he has come down them for his afternoon bath and prayer. The great river that is curling around the steps, dashing its tiny foam-tipped wavelets up against the stones, in faint imitation of the great ocean to which it is hastening, seems to this old man, not a mass of water, but a spiritual being—a mother. In that square house that juts on to the arch that forms a gateway for the bathing-ghat he first saw the light; from that little window, his childish heart bursting with grief, he saw the flames eating up and devouring that cloth-bound corpse that yesterday was his living, loving mother; under the shade of the trees he played about as a child, weaving wreaths of heavy-scented jasmine for the placid bull that stood within the temple; from childhood to manhood, and again to old age, the river and the trees, with the shining heaven above, had shared his joys and sorrows, and from them he had learnt the lessons of faith and purity and selfishness that Nature gives only to those who are meek enough and patient enough to sit at her feet.

The young men who visit the temple despise his ignorance, for he has none of the mental agility and book-lore that they have brought from their colleges; he has no theories on the regeneration of mankind, no desire to sit on district boards, edit newspapers, or become a municipal commissioner. With such a soulless, unambitious man, what can a rising young Hindoo have in common? This old man, who is content to sit all through the long hours of the afternoon watching the river change from colour to colour, till at last it is like a great opal shining out a thousand nameless tints, what is he thinking of as he sits on the last step, letting his hand be pushed up and down by the wavelets? As the boat grates he looks up, and, seeing Europeans, he rises and salams respectfully.

"What are you doing here, pundit?"

"Nothing, sahib. An old man like me has but little to do except contemplate. It is not difficult to keep from thoughts of the world at my age. I sit here by Ganga Mai and think."

"Ganga Mai does not often smile back at you as she does to-day."

"It is true, sahib. Why, only last year, when the moon of Bhadon was full, where we sit now was deep under the water, and from the chabutra you could see it away and away, with only black marks, which we knew to be the tops of those trees that look so large on the other bank, standing out here and there. All the people on that side had to leave their houses; some sat all night on the tallest trees, hearing the swish-swish of the water round them, and seeing house after house fall in with a great thud, for it was a clear moonlight night; the others went away in boats. I did not sleep much that night—I could not—thinking of the poor people. The next morning, before the light was on the water—you know, sahib, the light comes there first, long before it comes on the land—I went out. The river had risen more than three spans. Fearful cries came from the dark surface in front of us. We knew what it was—the cattle had been washed off the island that is six miles up. We called out to comfort them, but no one dared to go out to save them. As the day broke dark heads could be seen out far in the stream; now a roof with men clinging to it, then thirty or forty heads, then two or three men on a raft, for, sahib, the ahirs never left their animals. I heard afterwards that they had stood all night by them with the water rising higher and higher, till at last they were all washed off their feet. The sahib who lives yonder soon saw them, and before long all the boats were out from the fishermen's village. The sahib saved over a hundred bullocks, and fed them and kept them till they were claimed. I was too old to help, so I sat and watched."

"Did you pray for them?"

"How pray?"

"Did you not pray that Ganga Mai would not drow them?"

"No; the Great Spirit knows best if their day had come. Who was I to interfere?"

"But we believe that our God loves prayer, and always hears when we pray."

"Our God—it is always the same, you all want a God for yourself; your own—Hindoo, Christian, Mahomedan—sahib, is mine and yours and everybody's. Yes, sahib, the padres come and talk to me; they tell me that if only I saw things as they do I should be in the right; they say many clever things, and I listen. But, sahib, it seems to me that we men are like the leaves of the great peepul tree. When the grain is turning yellow, then the tender rosy leaves unfold, and in a few days strength comes into their veins and pride into their hearts, and feeling the warm young life within them they call: 'We are eternal; we will renew all things. Look at us: how fresh and strong we are. Can we be compared to yonder dead skeletons that the wind is tossing into heaps? We shall never be like them—lifeless and useless.' But as the days grow long and then short again, the rain beats on them and the wind flings them here and there; they grow weary, and into their life-blood comes the hankering for rest. When the cold sets in, they think calmly of the day when they shall lie brown and withered at the feet of their parent—content, for they know that the tree has a new set of leaves rolled up in the hard nobs that are coming out. And so it seems to me are we, with our systems and our religions. When the heart-blood of a nation is young, it perfects its system and worships it; but as old age comes we see that the system has also lost its vigour, and if we are wise, we make room for new blood The tree, our world, will pass away; but the essence, the one God, remains—no particle of Him can ever be lost. Your God, sahib, and mine, the Father of all is called by a thousand names, and yet the same. It is we, sahib, who do not want them to be the Father of all. As in earthly things we value what we call 'ours,' so in heavenly we would keep God as a peculiar treasure. Our system, sahib, is like me—old, old—and the young hearts are breaking away, but for an old man it is enough. As I sit here day after day, my eyes growing dim and my limbs more easily tired, I seem to see things more clearly. Sahib, have you ever, sleeping outside in the hot nights, been woke up by the soft east wind coming up the valley? Have you not thought you felt it damp and that it was laden with the soft sweet scent that rises from the hungry earth when rain has fallen? So I feel, sahib, that the days bring me promise of the breaking away from all our little ways to the great refreshing breath of God, just as the rain falling on the earth and bringing to life the thousands of the earth compares with our feeble efforts to keep alive some pet plants."

A bell tinkled, and Atma turned to go, for the hour of prayer had come. Was the meek-hearted old man far wrong?

THE OLD MESS.

(Madras Mail.)

The mists from memory rise
Unveiling hidden years.
An ancient house 'neath Eastern skies
Its well known form uprears.

Verandas marble floored,
Well shaded rooms and hall,
The ever gay, tho' groaning board
Where welcome smiled on all.

Come back as though to-day
I were the careless lad,
Who held that life was skittle-play
And only fools were sad.

Ah! then we all were young,
Though time a wreath of snow
Across the Colonel's head had flung
To mark him as C. O.

One Major's hair was thin,
The other's waist was round;
What then!—the hearts that beat within
Their breasts were young and sound.

Each of us bore a name
Not given at the font,
Nor breathing tales of knightly fame
Like Hero's of romaunt.

"Beau," "Flopper," "Post and rails,"
"Rip," "Spider," "Crick," "Benbow," "Duke," "Pauper," "Buggins," memory fails,
'T was thirty years ago.

To silver trumpet-peals,
With flaming sword on thigh,
Our Colonel now a phalanx wheels
Through fields beyond the sky.

One Major lives in Bath,
A gruesome man is he;
The other romps down glory's path
Rich, famous, K.C.B.

"Flop" sleeps at El Kebir;
Poor "Crick" at Candahar;
Young "Buggins" is a gay old peer;
"Duke" drives a jaunting car.

"Benbow" his bed doth keep,
Who loved on wave to toss;
While "Spider" tends the patient sheep
Beneath the Southern Cross.

Slight "Post" weighs twenty stone,
A Rector of renown
He rides no more, yet loves a run,
He runs fox-hunting down.

Fat, bald, and spouseless "Beau"
In Cripplegate is seen,
And "Rip" who hated children so,
Is father of sixteen.

"The Pauper" whom the Powers
From first to last caresst
Is now the Lord of Topham Towers,
The jewel of the West.

The curtain falls again
And shrouds my puppet-show,
Whelming these shadows of the brain
In mists of long ago.

BULBUL.

A CASTE CENSUS.

(Pioneer.)

In taking the last Census it was found, for example, that some members in nearly every Hindu caste follow, either in addition to or in place of their ordinary caste occupation, that of agriculture. This merely supplied information of which everybody was already in possession. If it had been found that caste prejudice was at all disregarded in the matter of occupation, that a barhai, for example, was often found to be working as a leather-dresser, or a gadariya as a goldsmith, we should then have had some evidence of social movement and reform worth the cost; but the evidence on this point was purely negative, and showed that, with some trifling and insignificant exceptions, caste prejudice remains as powerful as ever in the matter of occupation. The cost and labour therefore of compiling statements showing occupation in connection with caste were, and probably for some decades will still continue to be, out of all proportion to any practical value in the results obtained. The case is, however, not the same with the returns showing the civil condition of castes and tribes.

SIR EDWARD BRADFORD, A.D.C.

(Madras Mail.)

By a gratifying coincidence, the day that witnessed the arrival in his own Presidency, after an absence of fifteen years of (Brevet) Colonel Sir Edward Bradford, K.C.S.I., Madras Staff Corps, has proved to be the day on which the Queen conferred on him the distinction of Aide-de-Camp to Her Majesty—a distinction enjoyed by no other officer at the present time of the Madras army. Sir Edward Bradford joined the Madras army in 1853, and served with the 14th Light Dragoons in the Persian campaign from Feb. 21st till June 8th, 1857; served in the Jubbulpore district during 1857, and afterwards in the North-Western Province, in 1858. He was with General Michael's Force in Mayne's Horse against Tantia Topee in 1858; present at the general action of Scindwha, and the action and pursuit at Karai. Served with General Napier's Columns in Mayne's Horse from December, 1858, to September, 1859, and was present in several actions with the enemy (twice thanked in despatches, medal). He was appointed C.S.I. in 1876, after the Prince of Wales's tour through India; and K.C.S.I. in 1885, when Governor-General's Agent for Rajpootana. He is now Secretary in the Political and Secret Department of the India Office, an appointment which was held for many years by the late Sir John Kaye, K.C.S.I., the Indian historian.

SECRETARY AND CORRESPONDENT.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Prince Albert Victor has seen the admirable record which Mr. J. D. Rees has drawn up of Lord Connemara's recent tour in the North and North-West. He must envy the Governor of Madras the possession of so excellent a chronicler of his progresses. Mr. Rees seems to unite the qualifications of a private secretary with those of an excellent special correspondent, who sees more than meets the eye of the careless wanderer, and who has a happy knack of giving picturesque form to his travelling impressions. His journal of the tenth tour which the energetic Governor of Madras has made is so much the more noteworthy a piece of good work in that Lord Connemara seems nowhere to have gone far afield of the beaten track of cold weather tourists. He went to Calcutta and Darjeeling, to Allahabad and to Simla, then to the North-West Frontier, and home by Kurrachee and Bombay. The route gave as little material for novelty of treatment as a journey homeward by Brindisi and Modane, and yet the most travelled amongst us might turn over Mr. Rees' lively eleven folios without feeling too conscious of going over familiar ground. Calcutta, of course, gives the chronicler small opportunity for novelty of description. But in Darjeeling and its neighbourhood Mr. Rees, who always shows a turn for picturesque description, found much to write about. We need not quote his descriptive passages. Still less need we lay ourselves under obligation to him for an account of the Sikkim Expedition, which reads like ancient history told in short sentences of easy words. There is, however, upon this page a pretty little story which will do well to illustrate the truth that British supremacy in India rests largely upon prestige. When the Thibetans, after resting in confidence behind a stone wall, had to retreat, a plain-spoken inhabitant of Sikkim remarked to a captured Thibetan:—"If you cannot stop the British when you are behind such defences as that, what is the use of expecting to stop them anywhere?" The philosophy of this story should commend itself to all frontier malcontents.

FOREST DEPARTMENT GRIEVANCES.

(Statesman.)

The European members of the Forest Department, engaged in England and sent out to India after a special training, under rules laid down by the Secretary of State, appear to us to have made out a strong case for their admission to the benefit of the same pension rules as enjoyed by the European members of the Public Works and Telegraph Departments, who, like themselves, have been specially trained and engaged in England. The superior staff of all three departments alike is now recruited from among the passed students of Cooper's Hill College; and the only effect of any invidious distinction between the officers of the three departments in the matter of pension would obviously be that an inferior class of men who had failed to enter either the Public Works or the Telegraph Department would be left to recruit the Forest Service. Such a result would, of course, be most undesirable. During the twenty-five years of its existence the Forest Department has been steadily growing in importance, while it is not too much to say that its capabilities as a source of public revenue are still only very partially developed. It is highly important therefore that the superior staff of the department should be drawn from the best class of men available, so that they may be equal to dealing adequately with their subordinate establishments, composed of the highly educated pupils of the Forest School at Dehra. But to secure the best class of men for the superior grades it is obvious that they must not be debarred from the privileges conceded to officers of the other two departments. It is very rightly pointed out by the Forest officers that their present pension rules were framed to provide especially for the case of men engaged in India for the work of the department. Another strong point in their favour is, that they are far more liable than their brethren in the other two departments to fever and malaria and other dangers incidental to a life of exposure in the forests. We trust that no mistaken notions of economy will lead the Government to refuse the bare justice which this valuable class of public servants are now seeking at its hands.

Digitized by Google

MR. HUME PAYS THE PIPER.

(Indian Nation.)

Mr. Hume's experiences and consequent feelings are like those of everybody else who has endeavoured or expected to raise money for popular movements, or to realise from subscribers the amounts they have subscribed. It would not be enough to have the English expenses of 1890 "guaranteed"; they must be actually paid. The money test is the hardest test, but the only real test in this country. People are full of admiration for Lord Ripon, but the construction of a memorial, like a statue, seems to be as far from realisation as ever. These are facts, but one must say nothing about them. We, however, are accustomed to run the risk of speaking what we consider to be plain truths. However that may be, we are sincerely sorry for the prospects of the National Congress, and, in particular, of the political agency in England. We should be glad to learn that the letter published as Mr. Hume's is a hoax. The Advocate of India had an item of news the other day to the effect that it was proposed to hold the Congress once every five years. That, we think, is a most excellent suggestion. The Congress occasions great expenditure, and some portion of the money could be well saved.

GOOD WORK IN KASHMIR.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Although the Resident in Kashmir does not appear in the Proceedings of the Kashmir Council, we can understand from the quarterly report of the latter something of Colonel Nisbet's labours. We do not suppose that there is a single subject of any importance mentioned in the first Report, or brought before the Council, which was not first submitted to and discussed with him. We know, moreover, that it was the Resident who had to apportion to each member of Council his duties, to frame the rules of business and the regulations of all departments. Of course, as time goes on, the State Council will grow strong enough to act independently, and with the Maharaja at its head to form as near an approach to model government as the circumstances of the State will permit. This will be a much more satisfactory stafe of things, as well for the Government of India as the Kashmir State and the Resident himself. But, apart from the inexperience of the Kashmir administration in formal government, there are many reasons why the Council should at first lean heavily upon the Resident. The attitude of the Maharaja and his brother, Raja Ram Singh, has greatly fettered the action of the Council, and we fear that the tendency of high authorities in India has been to unduly subordinate the interests of the Kashmir State to diplomatic considerations; while some of the clumsy utterances of Lord Cross have been simply disastrous. The efforts of good men in the State have thus been paralysed, and bad men have been greatly encouraged in evil and intrigue of the worst kind. It is only when we take all these adverse circumstances into consideration that we can estimate the real value of the work which the Kashmir State Council is able to record in its first quarterly report, or the multifarious difficulties of Colonel Nisbet's position. When we further consider that all these difficulties have lain entirely outside the ordinary duties of a Resident in Kashmir, and recollect that the ordinary duties, which more than taxed the powers of some of Colonel Nisbet's predecessors, have this year—what with Gilgit, and Ladakh, and Kafiristan—been unusually heavy, we can form some estimate of the real services which he has rendered to the Government of India and the Kashmir State. It is with extreme pleasure that we feel ourselves justified in the foregoing remarks, because we were the first to recommend Colonel Nisbet's selection for the post of Resident in Kashmir.

SCIENCE AND DISEASE IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We are glad to see that the leprosy panic, communicated to London by the Prince of Wales, and by London to India, has given place generally to a much more reasonable frame of mind. Instead of instant demand for coercive legislation, we have only a much milder call for inquiry. So far as this is concerned, the wonder is, not so much that such a call has never been made before, but that there should ever have been any need for it at all. Successive Governments of India have, indeed, been curiously neglectful of their opportunities. India offers the finest field in the world for inquiry into many of the prime cursers of humanity: and the thanks of the civilized world would certainly be accorded to the Government who set machinery in motion for exploring the same. Cholera, typhoid fever, hydrophobia, leprosy—no one who has been for a few years in India can deny that this sultry triangle in the Pacific is, if not the home, yet a large and prolific nursery of all these. Other lands may boast their elephantiasis, goitre or yellow jack, but for general fecundity in four of the worst diseases known to suffering mankind, India takes the foremost place. Yet, while the savants of other countries have been laboriously pursuing the microbe of cholera far from home, and hunting the bacillus of rabies through every stage of animal life, from white mice to man; while panic-stricken London has thrown itself into ecstasies of panic over one leprous butcher, India has done nothing. Such a scandalous waste of wealth in disease would lead to scientific bankruptcy under the best of administration. And indeed it is difficult to discover where any science—which depends, in the first instance, on the collection of ascertained facts—even now is to be found in India in our treatment of the three great scourges mentioned.

We have seen it stated in apology that Indian doctors are not men of science, but only practicians; because they have no time for anything else. We have heard it retorted that Indian doctors have plenty of time for gymkhanas and polo, and that the real reason of the absence of zeal—not professional but scientific—among medical men in India is the enervating effect of the climate, whereby men's minds are reduced to frivolity the moment their hours of compulsory daily work are over. We do not accept either of these opinions. While it is certain that India has contributed scarcely anything to the world's scientific knowledge of cholera, leprosy or hydrophobia, although it ought to be the source whence the main stream of the world's knowledge on these subjects should flow: at the same time we think that our doctors are not to blame. Their work, like the work of most of us in India, is of a kind that demands relaxation, and they lack the leisure to make a chamber study of each interesting case. Still less have they the scientific opportunities for elaborate investigation of abstruse science. When "half the station" is down with fever, or when cholera-stricken and panic-stricken men are dying like flies, the Indian doctor rises to the occasion, and conscientiously performs an amount of solid work which amply entitles him to his polo or pigsticking when the station has a gleam of casual health. We fancy that Nature has not varied her general Indian system in this matter of disease. In India she always reckons in crores instead of units. Take an acre of English jungle land, and note the infinite diversity of plants, insects and often birds that strike the notice. Take five thousand acres of the Punjab, and an infinite sameness seems to prevail throughout. In England half a score of plants struggle for foothold on each foot of ground; in India square miles seem to be engrossed by half a dozen. Possibly this may be only the appearance which Indian scenery presents to the casual observer: but the same feature seems to be so common in every general view of the circumstances of India, that there is probably some reality in the idea. It would, at any rate, seem to hold good of Indian diseases; and it is just this fact which should make inquiry into the common diseases of India prolific of valuable results.

Take the four diseases we have mentioned—cholera, typhoid fever, hydrophobia, leprosy, adding to them, perhaps, the suffering from snakebite—and we have five of the deadliest enemies of human life, of each and all of whom it may be truly said that no country in the world offers a wider or more fertile field for investigation. The Government of India has, therefore, a duty to the civilised world, as well as to its own subjects, in making a serious and sustained effort to collect scientific knowledge on these subjects, and to elaborate the same and collate it with existing information elsewhere.

Digitized by Google

Beyond pointing out this duty, it is not our task to draw out in detail the system which should be followed; but one or two things may be mentioned which strike us as essential. The first is, of course, a central institution, where some of our best scientists may be employed, free from all ordinary professional duties, simply in collating the facts and ideas sent in from all parts of India, and conducting experiments suggested thereby. Secondly, there should be drawn up certain forms which every medical man in Government employ should be required to fill up, giving the salient details and methods adopted in each case treated by him of the above-named diseases, with a separate column for remark upon any special feature. There would thus accumulate at the central institution an immense amount of statistics, the tabulated results of which and of the experiments which had been made could not fail to be of the greatest utility immediately. Each medical officer could thus profit individually next year by the collective experience during the current twelve months of all his colleagues throughout India; and each year's statistics would show improved results; until the nearest possible approach to certain success in the treatment of these fell diseases had been satisfactorily recorded. This method of treatment would become the common property of all medical men throughout the civilized world: and the names of cholera or hydrophobia might come to be classed with the King's Evil and the Black Death as bogies of a by-gone age. Contrast this grand possibility with the results that would accrue from the present system in an equal period of time. Each individual medical officer now works, as it were, on his own plot of ground, garners his own small harvest of scientific knowledge of the different diseases which he combats, and goes home leaving no one the wiser for anything which he may have learnt. Except, therefore, for additional knowledge published in Europe, and filtering slowly into the practice of this country, India profits nothing with the advance of time. Each year marks little recorded progress on the road towards the triumph of science over disease. Every year as much valuable knowledge as the whole of the rest of the civilised world produces runs to waste: and all for the want of some such system as we have suggested. Our medical system in India is like a body without a head. We have indeed Surgeons-General and Inspectors-General and all the rest of it: but these are "heads" of the system only in name. Rationally regarded, they are but the controlling muscles of the body of the medical profession in India. They are in no sense whatever the brain-containing head of the system, to direct its efforts into the channels leading to knowledge and power over disease. This, in fact, is altogether wanting. There is no nerve-centre of scientific communication between the detached members of the body, and until this is provided, there can be no real life or independent progress; but only, as now, the stereotyped action of an automatic machine, which distributes to Indian patients the pills and boluses recommended by Europe.

SECOND-CLASS PASSENGERS.

(Madras Mail.)

There is reason to believe that the majority of Anglo-Indian ladies and gentlemen who once travel second-class by an Indian mail or other steamer will not care to repeat the experiment. It is comparatively easy to "rough it" for a short time on shore; but it is a very different matter on board ship, where passenger life at the best is wearisomeness of the flesh to most people. Consequently gentlefolk who for financial considerations go second-class must endure for several days and nights discomforts that go against their grain, and rudely shock the habits and associations of a life-time. The Steam Ship Companies might adapt second-class accommodation to the well-known prejudices of persons in a good position in society in India; but who then would go first-class? One cannot reasonably expect something closely approaching first-class accommodation for second-class fare. It is, moreover, open to question, whether the commissioned and covenanted servants of the Government of this country comply altogether with the official and social requirements of their position, when they associate at sea on equal terms with persons with whom they could not dine, much less live on shore without a breach of discipline that would expose them to the censure of superior authority. "Rank is but the guinea's stamp," and a Sergeant may be as good a man as, not to say a better man than a Captain; but human society being constituted as it is, the graduation formed in the interests of command and subordination should, to a great extent, be observed on an Indian steamer, as in an Indian cantonment, or at least there should be no such violent departure from it, as that which makes Sergeant and Corporal the sharers of the same cabin, and companions at the same table. The State is presumed to pay its commissioned and covenanted officers sufficient salaries to enable them to live in a style harmonious with their rank; and if, as a matter of fact, the salaries have been so seriously reduced by the fall in exchange, that they do not suffice to enable the recipients to travel in a manner according with their rank, the Government should be moved to take the impoverishment of its servants into consideration, and to offer some compensation for it. The intrusion of those who are as "fish out of water" in second-class cabins, is not appreciated by bonâ fide second-class passengers, whose comforts are none too abundant at the best, but whose feelings merit respectful consideration.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF BOMBAY.

The Pioneer has the following on the new Governor of Bombay:—"Lord Harris has been selected for the succession to Lord Reay, as Governor of Bombay. The appointment is not so good as would have been that of Lord Balfour of Burleigh, but then a much worse one might have been made, and, on the whole, the Western Presidency has cause for content. Everybody has heard that Lord Harris is a good cricketer, which makes him a compendium of some manly virtues; beyond this, popularly, not much is known; perhaps few are aware, by the way, that he is a West Indian by birth George Robert Canning Harris is only son of the 3rd Baron, his mother having been a daughter of the Venerable George Cumming, Archdeacon of Trinidad, where he was born in 1851, which makes him about 38—full young for so important a Governorship. Lord Harris was married to a daughter of Lord St. Vincent, a lady of his own age, in 1874. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, where he took his B.A., and has an ancestor who figured in Indian History, as Commander-in-Chief at the siege of Seringapatam. He was Under-Secretary of State for India during 1885-86, when he was transferred to the corresponding post in War. It may be said of Lord Harris that, if his official career so far as disclosed, no brilliant talent, on the other hand it has been disfigured by no blunders. He has some experience in and aptitude for affairs, and is a good man of business; in party politics, of course, a Conservative. Personally he is an amiable and pleasant fellow. He is likely to prove constitutional in his methods and to attempt no surprises; safe in the sense that the noble task before him requires study, and unhampered by any pedantic convictions that he is mostly much wiser than the men around him.

The incredible rumour about the offer of the Governorship of Bombay to Sir John Gorst, says the Madras Mail, has been effectually disposed of by the announcement that Lord Harris has received the appointment. It has been understood for several years that he was disposed to come to India; but it has been believed that his ambition pointed rather to Madras than to Bombay. It was in Madras that his grandfather, General Harris, Commander-in-Chief, of Seringapatam celebrity, gained his peerage; and it was in Madras that his father, the second Lord Harris, reigned from 1854 to 1859. In the summer of 1886 he was confidently mentioned as the most likely successor to Sir Mounstuart Grant Duff, until it was announced that the appointment had been offered to, and accepted by the late Lord Mayo's brother. He was born at Trinidad, while his father was governing that island. His mother was a daughter of Archdeacon Cummings, of Trinidad. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford, and developed a taste for and skill in cricket that have conferred a world-wide fame upon him. He was twenty-one years of age when his father died. He has captained an eleven that went to Australia and he has written and spoken more about cricket than any other man of the present day. But he is a good deal more than a first-class bat, and a very useful bowler. He has for several years taken a great interest in public affairs, and he has occupied a creditable position in the House of Lords. In 1885, at the age of thirty-four, he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for India, and in the following year he was transferred to the War Office. He has popular manners, much shrewdness, and abundant sympathy. He is particularly fortunate in at least one respect, namely, in his wife, a daughter of the 3rd Viscount St. Vincent, to whom he was married in 1874. She is one of those talented and charming women who thoroughly identify themselves with the work and life of their husbands, and she is known to have been of great service to him in his public life. They have no family; so they will, while in Bombay, be able to make it their home. They are not strangers to India, for they paid it a visit a few years ago, and came to Madras in the course of their tour, and they also saw Bombay. All that is known about Lord Harris favours the idea that he will satisfy the somewhat exacting requirements of the Western Presidency.

The Madras Times says: The news that Lord Harris is to succeed Lord Reay will remove any lingering hope that may have existed that perhaps the Hon. Mr. Scoble might be selected for the high appointment. As usual, many names have been mentioned in connection with the approaching vacancy. Lord Harris has been "in the running" the whole time, and the selection made will be popular among many, if not all of our Bombay neighbours. In the world at large the 4th Baron Harris is known as a first-class cricketer; here and there are some who know how widely he has travelled, how satiated he is with sight-seeing, and how Lady Harris, once in the front rank of London beauties, has accompanied him through most of his wild wanderings, preserving throughout a freshness of interest in "sights" and "wonders" which contrasts curiously with the inert indifference now taken in such matters by her lord. In Madras Lord Harris is known as the son of a former Governor and as a peer who has partaken of local hospitality, and who "did" the Southern Presidency in company with Lady Harris about the end of 1882. To Bombay, as to India generally, the Governor-elect of the "Kingdom" is a Peer who has been Under Secretary for India and for War, and who is generally known as a great man in the cricket field, and all-round good companion. An old Etonian and a Christ Church man should find a welcome there, and Baron Harris of Serigapatam and Mysore in India, and of Belmont in the United Kingdom, will be a social acquisition. Of his probable success as a ruler we need predict nothing, except that he will follow a man about whom opinions are divided, and that he is likely to have some very delicate work before him. The social success of Lady Harris is a foregone conclusion.

The Bombay Samachar says: "It is quite possible that the appointment of Lord Harris, who is at present Under-Secretary for War, at a time when mighty defensive and offensive preparations are going on near the frontiers, may have, if not direct, an indirect bearing on the present situation of affairs in India. It may be that the Home Government were sending out a man who may in time of need prove useful to the Government of India, having had some experience of the War Office. Because Lord Harris had been to India on a tour, it does not prove that he has any experience of this country. We cordially congratulate Lord Harris upon the high office that has been conferred upon him. We hope and trust, however, that the inhabitants of this Presidency will not form any opinion, high or low, or any big expectation of their new Governor, until they are in a position to judge of his capacity as the ruler of this Presidency.

The Kaiser-i-Hind says:—The appointment of Lord Harris as Governor of Bombay cannot but be satisfactory to the inhabitants of the Presidency. A better selection could not have been made by Lord Salisbury's Government. If the past political career of Lord Harris could be taken as an earnest of his future, it surely promises happy results. It is certainly the good fortune of Bombay that it should have such a young and worthy successor to Lord Reay.

The Gujrati says:—India will not be a strange land to Lord Harris, as he has acted as Under-Secretary of State for India during Lord Salisbury's administration in 1885, and the traditions of his distinguished family will hold out no small temptation for him to distinguish himself in his new capacity in the very country where his father and grandfathers won laurels long ago. He takes a foremost rank among distinguished cricketers. His example and influence are, therefore, sure to impart a fresh impetus to the progress of the manly game in the Native community and to physical education in general. Anxious hopes and expectations always centre round a new nomination; but prudent people prefer anxious suspense to pronouncing at once any judgment, favourable or otherwise, on newcomers.

The Jame-Jamshed says:—Lord Harris is an industrious and a fair minded statesman. There is no special reason why our people should warmly welcome his appointment, nor is there any reason for despondency. The Conservative Government has sent one of the best men to govern Bombay.

The Akbari Soudagar says:—Lord Harris had given satisfaction both to the Government at home and to the Indians when he was Under-Secretary of State for India. He has, besides, some experience of this country, which he visited some time ago.

BENGAL.

(Nov. 27.)

THE following are the impending official changes in the Financial Department:—

Mr. E. Rule, Comptroller of Indian Treasuries, returns from leave in the beginning of January next, when Mr. J. E. Cooke, who officiates for him, reverts to his substantive appointment of Deputy Accountant-General, Bengal.

Mr. H. Cowie, the present Deputy Accountant-General, Bengal, goes to Madras in the same capacity, relieving Mr. Roy, who reverts to his substantive appointment of Assistant Comptroller-General, Calcutta.

Mr. H. Oung, having returned from Europe, joins his appointment of Assistant Comptroller-General, relieving Mr. J. C. Bose, who reverts to his former post of Assistant Accountant-General, Bengal.

IT is stated on reliable authority that Mr. E. Gay, Comptroller-General, retires from the service early next year, after having served in the Financial Department for over twenty-five years. His successor has not yet been decided upon, the choice lying between Mr. Atkinson and Mr. Jacob. If Mr. Atkinson gets the appointment Mr. S. Jacob comes from Bombay as permanent Accountant-General, Bengal. Mr. Rawlins takes up Mr. Jacob's place at Bombay.

As it has been recently ruled by the Government of India that an enrolled Financial Officer should be appointed Comptroller of Postal Accounts, the Postal Department recommends the appointment of Mr. H. Keene, at present Assistant Comptroller-General in charge, Calcutta Currency Office, should be appointed to that post, but Mr. Fanshawe, at whose suggestion the change is to be introduced, recommends Mr. Ham for it.

MADRAS.

(Nov. 27.)

THE Hon. Sir Arthur Collins, Chief Justice, has had a rather sharp attack of fever, but he is now convalescent, and he has resumed his duties with characteristic ardour.

ON the suggestion of the Superintendent of Stationery, who recently made an exhaustive inquiry into the subject, the Government of Madras have resolved on effecting some much-needed reforms with the object of reducing the expenditure on stationery used in Government offices. The costlier and larger sizes of paper for books and registers are to be discontinued, the number of official forms printed at one time is to be limited to the requirements of the current year, and cheaper qualities of paper are to be used in official correspondence. That reform was necessary may be judged from the fact that in several districts the only paper used in official correspondence, no matter how trivial, was foolscap hand-made paper, the costliest in the market. Last year over Rs. 22,000 were saved by purchasing country articles, and when Sir Richard Barlow's recommendations are given effect to, the economy will be much more considerable. The example of Madras in this respect might be followed with advantage in other provinces.

THE Madras-Penang cable has failed again, and as the consequence of this all telegrams to and from the further East have to pass through Calcutta and Rangoon. The delay in their transmission through India has been increased, owing to interruptions on the coast line between Madras and Calcutta, caused by cyclonic weather.

THE Madras Mail thinks that the appointment of Major-General Sir George Greaves cannot fail to be approved of in Bombay. The Bombay Army has, together with that of Madras, been lately subjected to much unfair comment at the hands of irresponsible critics. Sir George Greaves is well suited not only to remove what defects there are in the organisation of the Bombay Army, but also to make his voice heard, if needful, in defending any part of the system which to its opponents does not appear to be vindicable.

THE PRINCE AND THE ELEPHANT.

THE following, according to a "special correspondent" to the Bombay Gazette from Mysore, Nov. 28, is the real story upon which was founded the sensational telegram that Prince Albert Victor had been charged by a wild elephant, and his life providentially saved by the cool courage of Colonel Sanderson:—

"On Tuesday morning the Prince was to have gone back to the kheddah to witness the tying-up of the wild elephants, but heavy rain fell during the night. It being very wet in the morning, Dr. Jones would not hear of the Prince's going out in the damp. About ten o'clock the rain held off, and the sky began clearing, the Prince, with a small party, took their guns and did a little shooting in the surrounding jungle, securing fine specimens of pretty plumaged birds, which the Prince having stuffed, they had breakfast and lunch in the camp. The afternoon turned out bright. Mr. Sanderson sent a messenger to say he was ready to proceed with the tying-up operations. The Maharajah went out to the kheddah at three o'clock, and saw a few elephants secured. The Prince arrived nearly at five o'clock with Mr. Bradford, the Resident, Mr. Vincent, and a few others. The operations were of a very interesting and exciting nature. A herd of thirty-five elephants were divided into two batches. Eight tame Dacca elephants with mahouts and attendants entered at one enclosure, and secured the large troublesome females first. The Prince and Mr. Sanderson entered the enclosure, when a big female elephant charged within ten yards of where the Prince stood. The Prince took flight and escaped to the platform at the gate. Mr. Sanderson stood firm, held up his arms, and shouted loudly, thus frightening it. This female elephant was then surrounded by tame elephants. Some attendants dismounted, and secured the hind feet with thick ropes and made her fast to a tree. Other large brutes were similarly treated. Young ones were lassooed. The Prince spent the night in tents near the kheddah with a small party."

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE.

BANQUET TO MR. H. S. KING, M.P.

(Bombay Gazette.)

On Tuesday evening the members of the Uncovenanted Service gave a banquet in the Town Hall, to Mr. H. S. King, M.P. Sir Henry Morland occupied the chair, and among the guests were Judges of the High Court, and many members of the Civil and Military Services. The band of the Gloster Regiment played a selection of music during the evening. After the usual loyal toasts the Chairman proposed the health of Mr. King, which was received with enthusiasm.

Mr. King, in the course of an able and animated speech, put the case for the Uncovenanted Service with great clearness and force. He spoke of the apathy and indifference with which the House of Commons listened to the grievances of the Service, and said that many members appeared to regard the Uncovenanted Civilian as a dangerous beast, the product of a tropical soil, and an Eastern imagination. Speaking of Sir John Gorst's famous plea that the ryot were too poor to pay the pensions of the Service at two shillings in the rupee, he said the plea amounted to a proposition that India was too poor to be honest.

Upon this Mr. Justice Parsons who was one of the guests, rose and made a protest, stating he could not as one of her Majesty's servants remain and hear the Government assailed.

The Chairman requested Mr. Justice Parsons to resume his seat, and not to interrupt the speaker who was in perfect order with his remarks, a ruling which was ratified by a hearty applause. The learned judge, however, declined to remain in the hall, and retired, creating some sensation. Meanwhile Mr. King had resumed his seat, and hesitated to continue his speech, in answer to the most vociferous replies of "King, King."

Mr. Justice Scott then rose, and said that he felt quite sure Mr. Justice Parsons' only reason for leaving was that he did not wish to take sides in a controversy with Government; but that of course was understood; they were there as guests and not as partisans; and all their presence meant was they had a general sympathy with the uncovenanted service, in their claims for fair and equitable treatment.

Mr. King thereupon continued his speech, and said he did not conceive anything he had said could justly wound the feelings of the most susceptible. He concluded his speech with a brilliant peroration amid general and long-continued applause.

In reply to the toast of the visitors, Mr. Justice Scott repeated the expression of his regret that there should have been any misunderstanding, and said he was quite sure Mr. Justice Parsons' action was solely dictated by his desire to show that the High Court could on no account take sides in any controversy. Agreeing to this sentiment himself, he nevertheless felt certain that nothing had been said which need shock any one.

Mr. Grattan Geary, in responding to the toast of the Press, said in allusion to Mr. King's remark that while the Press in India had done justice to the claims of the Uncovenanted Service, the Press in England had been indifferent and hostile, that Mr. Cobden had laid down three conditions of success, firstly, that you should have a just cause, secondly, that you should be firmly resolved that it should succeed, and, thirdly, that it should have the opposition of a powerful journal in London. Alluding to the incident which had just taken place, Mr. Geary said that it was a rule in all sound journalism not to use any language which would be out of order if uttered in the House of Commons. Applying that rule, he declared that nothing had been said in the Town Hall that evening to which either Mr. Speaker or Sir John Gorst himself would dream of taking exception.

Mr. Propert, as father of the Civil Service, was sorry for the injured feelings of his dear departed brother who had just left the hall, and expressed his approval of the terms in which Mr. Geary had so emphatically stated that nothing unparliamentary had fallen from the lips of Mr. King. He said that beyond all question it was rough on the Uncovenanted Civil Servant when he retired to find himself with a reduced pension in his old age, after he had some good service for the country.

General Bugden, in an amusing speech, returned thanks for the Army, and while sympathising for the Uncovenanted Service ventured to ventilate a little grievance of his own, namely, the inefficient barrack accommodation for soldiers at Colaba.

Mr. Jardine and the Hon. F. Forbes Adam returned thanks on behalf of the Bar and the Chamber of Commerce, and wished the claims Mr. King had advocated all the success they deserved.

A cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman, Sir Henry Morland, and to Mr. Howard Warden, the secretary and organiser of the banquet, closed the proceedings of a meeting which may fairly be pronounced to have been an unqualified success.

SOCIAL LIFE IN INDIA.

The Contemporary Review for the current month concludes Sir William Hunter's most interesting article on one particular phase of social life in Bengal. We called attention last month to the subject, as indicating an attempt to bring to the knowledge of the people of this country some of the incidents which bind together certain sections of the European and native communities. Sir William Hunter has displayed a profound acquaintance with the workings of the native mind and of the springs which influence those of our own countrymen who devote their entire lives to reclaiming, as they consider it, the Eastern races from the bondage of ages. The story of "The Old Missionary" is in many senses a typical one. But never in any other article dealing with the same subject have we seen a diagnosis of character so perfect. The writer of the story had before him laid bare the secrets of the motives of the two great factors in the illustration of his theme, the English missionary and the fanatical convert, who at all costs is resolved to work out his principles to their legitimate end. We hope Sir William Hunter will continue the series. It is stories such as these which will foster the intimate acquaintance between the two races, now, as it has been for a century, little more than superficial. There is great danger lest political fanatics should divert the public mind into a wrong channel on this question. When we read that Sir William Wedderburn is leaving England to urge the fanatical native congress to adopt measures for which the native character and habit of thought are totally unfitted, and which, if pushed, must lead to reprisals which it is not pleasant to think of, we feel the more grateful to Sir William Hunter for endeavouring, by these masterly sketches of character, to lead the English current of thought into a purer and healthier course. In the sketch of "The Old Missionary" he has sounded the very depths, and we are confident that no one will be able to read it unmoved.—Evening Post.

THE NIZAM'S GOVERNMENT RECONSTITUTED.

The following is the full text of the resolution of the Minister regarding the Home Secretaryship of Hyderabad. The resolution is dated the 18th of November, and is issued from the Political and Financial Department:—

"After two years' careful consideration the Premier has decided that the number of Secretaries should be reduced, and some revision and alteration in their work effected. Accordingly, when a short while ago the Military Secretaryship of the Regular Troops fell vacant it was abolished. An opportunity has now presented itself when another Secretaryship can be reduced. Therefore it has been arranged that Nawab Fatteh Newab Jung, in accordance with the notification dated October last year, shall take charge of the office of Home Secretary. Moulvi Sayad Ali Belgrami will revert, according to the same notification, to his former appointment of Director-General of Mines. This arrangement, being due to the exigencies of the administration, will not affect Nawab Fatteh Newaz Jung in the matter of the salary he has hitherto been receiving.

"Whereas the railway and mining officers frequently deal with local talukdars, subadars, and customs commissioners, as also for other causes, the Minister is personally of opinion that the Railway and Mining Departments should be brought under the immediate control of the Revenue Secretary. As Nawab Intesar Jung does not know English, a knowledge of which is absolutely necessary for the conduct of work connected with these departments, they are placed under the Secretary in the Public Works Department, but all correspondence in connection therewith should be submitted by the Public Works Secretary through the Revenue Secretary to the Premier, and the Revenue Secretary shall have the power to write any opinion he pleases on such correspondence.

"The Departments of Justice, Police, and Jails are brought under the control of the Home Secretary. This arrangement will obviate the necessity of continuing a separate Secretary for Justice and Police.

"Nawab Imdad Jung, the present Judicial Secretary, who served formerly for some time as a Puisne Judge of the High Court, afterwards acted as Chief Justice with good results. He is now appointed permanent Chief Justice of that Court with an increase of salary amounting to Rs.500 above his present pay.

"The Home, Revenue and Public Works Secretaries, in view of the above change, will draw up two lists of necessary establishments, showing, first, how many clerks are to be retained in each department, and, second, how many are to be brought under reduction.—ASMAN JAH."

A GROWL AT REUTER.

A "New Subscriber" complains to the Times of Ceylon:—

SIR,—In these days of "strikes" it should be perfectly justifiable for subscribers to the Ceylon Public "Press" to "strike" against "Reuter" for the quality of his telegrams for which subscribers to the "Press" indirectly pay. The quality of his messages to the Ceylon "Press" has ever been almost downright insulting towards the intelligence of its readers, which he evidently gauges at a very low level, thinking the people very easily interested; but for some weeks past they have even exceeded the "beyond the beyond"—so much so that it becomes suggestive of the "Ceylon News Department" that it is relegated as a "perquisite" of the hall porter or office sweeper, who writes the very first item which may happen to catch his eyes in (second-hand) daily newspapers. Let any and everyone but peruse the files of telegrams (for some time past especially) and say if this description is or is not an exaggeration. Now, for nearly a month, our chief news is that some or another "royalty" is expected to visit a certain place upon a certain date, and will probably return home upon some anterior date. And fancy wiring that the Lord Mayor requested to walk instead of being driven in a procession! It is not supposed surely that the Ceylon public cared one way or the other if this person requested to walk upon his head, or that even such a person existed or ceased to exist. A favourite trick is to flash all over the world that some wretched person—retired tradesman or Indian Civil Servant, or some such person—has been knighted. But just let a body of soldiers be ordered to some such place as, say, Egypt, and this thrilling subject will do duty for a month. Once when a few Guardsmen were ordered to Suakim, of numerical strength insufficient to obviate being crushed into jelly by the one-hundredth particle of a European Continental regiment were they to collide, we were daily for a month treated to this sort of thing:—It is rumoured that they were to be sent. Rumour (next day) contradicted. Rumour (next day) confirmed. They will march on a certain day. No; they will go by rail instead. They are marching to the railway station. Their health is good. They are going aboard. The ship sails to-morrow. The ship has sailed. The ship is at sea, and expected to arrive upon a certain date. It is rumoured that they may be reordered to Cyprus without landing. Rumour contradicted. The ship has arrived. Health good. Troops to land to-morrow. Once more, Gone. Going to land. Landing. Landed—and so on! so on!! When are we to have done with this style of thing? If Reuter has no news to send, then let us have no "Wires" for and at the time being, but do not let him irritate our intelligence with rubbish which is not even worth inserting in a village halfpenny payer. Let us return to Bombay [Bombay Gazette Special Service] for telegrams like last year. Everyone was sorry at the time that arrangements were again come to with "Reuter" because it was discounted in advance what the result would be (such as we now every day see), whereas we got a better class of news through the medium of Bombay. But for a community to continue to pay for the present class of rubbish from Reuter would be for it to be guilty of a sinful and wasteful improvidential squandering of money, aggravated by the knowledge of how much existing distress there is which requires alleviation, and whither such squandered sums would occasionally bring a gleam of happiness.

AN up-country paper writes:—An incident that recently occurred at Cawnpore affords a curious commentary on the hyper-sensitiveness of Government in dealing with the question of Sunday labour. The heathen boys in the Cawnpore factories have settled the question for themselves. Recently, when warned for work on Saturday for the following day (Sunday), they let the manager understand that they would "scarcely be there." Accordingly, when on the Sunday morning the factory whistles sounded as usual, the engines were started and the machinery put in motion, but the mill hands were non est. The factory had in consequence perforce to observe the Sabbath—a very significant hint for our Government, who have all along been so over-sensitive with regard to the observance of the Sabbath—in deference to the feelings of the Natives. Only one factory now at Cawnpore enjoys the unenviable distinction of breaking the Fourth Commandment.

Miscellaneous.

The half-yearly report of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company places great importance in the profits the company are likely to derive from the transportation of coal which has been discovered at several points along the line. These deposits are now being extensively opened up, and sidings are being constructed by the railway company to the adjacent collieries.

A PROPOSAL is now on foot to abolish the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry in the minor Presidencies, and to place the musketry training of the three armies completely under the control of the Commander-in-Chief in India. The two chief objects of the proposal are stated to be—to secure uniformity in musketry-training and to improve the position of Deputy Assistant Adjutants-General for Musketry, by raising their staff pay from Rs. 300 to Rs. 400 per mensem, without causing extra expense to the State.

IT is believed that Colonel W. Hughes-Hallett, M.S.C., now on furlough, but recently officiating as Judge Advocate-General of the Army in India, has at his own request been permitted to resign his officiating appointment, and to revert to the post of Deputy Judge Advocate-General at Ootacamund. Colonel H. B. Sanderson will, therefore, continue to officiate as head of the Department until Colonel Clementi, the permanent incumbent, retires from the service early next year, when the former officer will probably be confirmed as as Colonel Clementi's successor.

THE late Major-General Alured Clarke Johnson, C.B., whose death has rendered vacant the command of the Royal Artillery in Ireland, was the eighth son of the late Major-General Sir Henry Allen Johnson, Bart., who was Aide-de-Camp to the Prince of Orange during the Peninsular War and grandson of the late General Sir Henry Johnson, G.C.B., Colonel of the 5th Regiment of Foot and Governor of Ross Castle. Four of his brothers have risen to high rank in the army, three of them attaining knightly distinction in the Order of the Bath. General Alured Johnson served in the Crimea, the Indian Mutiny Campaign, and the recent Afghan wars. In the latter campaign of 1878-9, he was present at the action of Ahmed Khel, and was in command of the Royal Artillery in the march from Cabul to the relief of Candahar, and the battle of the 1st of September.

THE succession to the Meerut Command was settled some time ago, Sir John Hudson being given the reversion at whatever date Sir George Greaves might vacate. But the Lahore paper now nominates Major-General Luck as the latter's successor; adding, however, at the same time, "in that case General Sir J. Hudson will probably go from Allahabad to Meerut." Why two "modern Major-Generals" asked the Allahabad paper, "should thus be gravely presented to Meerut it is difficult to say, but, in truth, no such practical joke is to be played upon the garrison. When Sir George Greaves takes up the Bombay Presidency command in the spring, Allahabad will lose its present General, who wisely selected Meerut instead of Lucknow when offered the choice between the two districts two months ago.

THE Nilgiri Railway scheme, says the Pioneer, is at last an accomplished fact, so far as the money to make it so is concerned, although, apparently, the line will only extend to Conoor, to begin with. In connection with the general subject, we are glad to know that Simla, which ought, perhaps, to have been the first hill station to be linked to the plains by railway, is no longer likely to be the last. The projectors of the Umballa-Kalka line have some sort of preferential claim to carry that line to its natural terminus, and we are glad to know that, encouraged by the earnest approval of the Government of India, with even more substantial help in prospect from the Secretary of State, the scheme of a line to Simla is apidly assuming practical shape at home

WE quote this from the Pioneer:—"The promoters of the National Congress are always ready to ascribe any criticism of that movement to hatred, malice, and uncharitableness; but it would seem that they are not altogether so deaf to what is said about them as they could well afford to be if there was nothing more than stupid detraction in the remarks of those whom they consider their enemies. In the whips that are now being sent round by the energetic management to supporters of the cause to beat up delegates for the meeting at Bombay, special urgency is laid on the necessity of getting hold of 'good Mahomedans'; from which it appears that the analyses that were made of last year's assembly, and the remarkable results they brought out as regards the Mussalman portion of it, have had their effect. Whether 'good Mahomedans' are at all more likely to be available for the purposes of the Congress is nother matter.

INDIAN INVESTMENTS.

I.—PRELIMINARY.

THAT strange, erratic creature the British shareholder, who puts his money into "limited liability" enterprises, has a curious way of assisting himself in realising his desire of being "rich beyond the dreams of avarice." He looks generally "afar off" to find a suitable investment for his savings, or speculation for his gamblings. With him it may be truly said that "distance lends enchantment to the view," and he is not of Wordsworth's opinion that the "most precious things"—that is to say, paying investments—may be those which "lie nearest" to him. Even as a prophet is said to have no honour shown to him in his own country, so local enterprises, however financially sound and promising, have little or no attraction for the interesting individual we refer to. He prefers to invest or speculate in ventures away from British soil or rule, the further away and the less known of such ventures the better. A limited liability company to make artificial ice at the North Pole, or to supply Equatorial Africa with hot water pipes, if started by an enterprising promoter, having unlimited knowledge of the gullibility of those his prospectus was written for, would, doubtless, if the capital was sufficiently extravagant, and the Board of Honourable (guinea-pig) Directors sufficiently aristocratic, find subscribers enough to enable it to go to allotment. At the Statutory meeting, four months afterwards, the assembled shareholders would express their satisfaction at hearing from the lips of a noble Chairman how the eminent engineer or manager whom the Directors had despatched on a handsome salary to the North Pole or to the Equator had been fully equipped to master all difficulties which could possibly come in his way—how from his knowledge of the magnificent property which the Company had acquired on most reasonable terms (cash and shares) from the Vendor—from his experience in similar enterprises, and from his high character for energy and probity—the Directors had every confidence in him, and were sanguine that when the shareholders were called together again at the first General Meeting it would be for the gratifying business of hearing the announcement of a "substantial dividend." Much applause follows, and a vote of thanks to the Chair concludes the interesting ceremony of the Statutory Meeting, at which accounts have not to be discussed. The confiding British shareholder leaves the room rejoicing in his good fortune in having been so fortunate as to have secured an allotment. Then "Time goes on"—a way which Artemus Ward says "time has"—rosy reports come from the enterprising engineer or manager, and the directors draw their fees, the secretary receives his salary with commendable regularity, and nothing occurs to disturb the even current of Time's way until suddenly the shareholders receive a notice that the Directors find it necessary to make a further "call." Call follows call until there is nothing more to be called. In the meantime the idea of a dividend has vanished from even the shareholders' minds, for the shares are either at heavy discount, or are altogether unsaleable. An Extraordinary General Meeting is the next step in the enterprise, and the opportunity may be taken advantage of by some one or more indignant shareholders to express dissatisfaction at the way the Directors have acted, or in the manner in which the Company's engineer or manager has worked; but the noble Chairman will either rule the dissentients to be "out of order," or will request the Company's solicitor, who, of course, will be present, to explain to them that their action is illegal, or that the "special" business for which the meeting was called will not allow of their being heard. A hot debate may follow as to whether the next step to be taken shall be "Reconstruction" or "Liquidation," those well-known names of twin sisters in the family of Finance. Directors and secretary will probably incline to "Reconstruction," for Hope will whisper to them that there may still be fees to draw and salary to receive. "All is not lost that lingers," says the poet, and an adroit appeal to the shareholders "not to sacrifice their property" may bring about a Resolution to the effect that an additional "call" shall be made, and an "independent expert" sent out to the property, to "examine and report upon it." A vote of confidence in the Directors, and one of thanks to the noble Chairman for the able manner in which he has shown to the shareholders a way out of a "temporary difficulty," may be the happy termination of this meeting. Or it may be that the "Solicitor" has the power of the votes of those present and of the "proxies," and he is almost certain to be in favour of "Liquidation." It is true, as some shareholder may pitifully plead, that this will mean the winding up of the concern and the wreck of all their hopes. But then it will be explained that there are partial wrecks and total wrecks, and that this need not be a total wreck—that much will depend on the appointment of a Liquidator who understands the science of salvage and can show judgment and economy in dealing with the flotsam and jetsam of foundered enterprises. The nomination of such a Liquidator is seldom left to the chance sense of the meeting. If the hour has come for liquidating, it will be found that so also is the man to liquidate. A certain name is proposed, seconded, and the appointment "carried by acclamation," without the slightest loss of valuable time. We need not pursue the strange, eventful history further. The end has come—at least, for the shareholder. The liquidator will go on liquidating; but so far as the investor is concerned, he has seen the conclusion of the play. The lights are out, and the curtain rung down.

The above is no imaginative sketch. It is what is occurring daily in London city, and it will go on occurring so long as there are so many speculators—shall we say most of them fools?—who catch at the bait of high premia or dividends offered in ventures where the property is far away beyond the ken or possible inquiry of the trusting Briton.

Having written this much by way of preface, we propose in one or two future numbers to touch upon the subject of certain enterprises more profitable—if less "promising"—and much more accessible than any at the North Pole or Equator. We would lead our investing friend to—India.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

IT has been ruled that officers of the Volunteer Reserve forces in India cannot command officers of the active Volunteer force.

COLONEL J. C. AUCHINLECK, R.H.A., has been placed on half-pay with effect from Nov. 20th, and permitted to proceed to England.

THE order notifying that 1st Class Station Staff Officers will in future hold their appointments for a limited term of five years and be seconded in their regiments during that time is cancelled.

LIEUTENANT H. V. L'ESTRANGE, 1st Battalion East Surrey Regiment, who had been lying ill for some time past in Allahabad from enteric fever, died on Nov. 21. He was interred in the Cantonment cemetery the next morning.

THE Viceroy during his stay at Quetta witnessed an interesting sham fight, in which the troops stormed some of the redoubts guarding the Ghazabund Pass. The main idea was the repulse of an imaginary enemy, advancing from Kandahar, who had succeeded in forcing the western mouth of the Pass. The real strength of the position about Quetta was doubtless made apparent during the course of the mimic action.

THE following letter from the Adjutant-General in India, dated 11th November, 1889, has been published for general information:—"The Adjutant-General has the honour, by direction of the Commander-in-Chief, to inform General Officers commanding that probationers for the Staff Corps who, by reason of employment on active service and consequent inability to study for the Higher Standard Examination in Hindustani, are desirous of having their probationary period extended should in future submit their applications six months before the expiry of their three years' probation.

THE officers of the Hyderabad Volunteer Rifles entertained the Resident at dinner at the United Service Club recently, to welcome him as their Honorary Colonel, to which he has been recently gazetted. Col. Ludlow, in a neat little speech, proposed the health of the guest of the evening, and took advantage of the occasion to impress on his officers the advantages of cohesion. Mr. Fitzpatrick, in replying, said that the honour done him that evening would not be the least appreciated of those with which he has been greeted since his arrival in Hyderabad. His years and the cares of his office would prevent him from being much more than an "honorary" officer of the corps; but he could safely promise that all he could do in the way of recruiting and furthering the interests of the regiment he would most gladly do.

THE CHIN LUSHAI EXPEDITION.

The following are the medical arrangements ordered for the Burma columns of the Chin-Lushai Expeditionary Force:—

General hospitals for British and Indian troops and native followers will be established at Myingyan, with accommodation for 50 soldier-patients and 200 followers.

At Kalewa a field station hospital will be organised with 25 beds for British troops, 30 beds for Indian, and 120 beds for Native followers. Sick sent back through Kan and Fort White, who are not ill enough for the general hospital at Myingyan, will be treated here and returned to the front.

At Kan field hospitals will be established to give accommodation to 25 British, 25 Indian, and 60 followers. A similar hospital will be established at Haka, the former for the treatment of sick from the Southern Column and outposts situated nearer to Kan than to Pokoko, and the latter for the sick received on medical transfer certificate from the Southern Column.

The Southern Column will be fully equipped to treat its own sick and wounded, and will transfer its cases to the field hospital at Haka when they encumber its movements or they are too serious to remain at the front.

On the line of communication between Kan and Haka two rest depots will be established, each to accommodate six British and twelve Native soldiers. These will be about twenty miles apart, and will contain all the medical and commissariat equipment necessary for the patients, the reception of sick from convoys, &c., and will be formed of half-sections of No. 26 Native Field Hospital under the charge of a medical officer.

The Northern Column operating from Fort White will be equipped in all respects as the Southern Column in proportion to its strength, and will transfer the sick who may encumber its movements to the station and regimental hospital at Fort White, those requiring change of climate or unlikely to recover at Fort White being sent to the hospitals at Kalewa.

The following will be the distribution of field hospitals forming the hospital accommodation of the force:—

In reserve at Kalewa	Section C., No. 23 British	Field Hospital
	Section A., No. 26 Native	"
At Kan	Section D., No. 23 British	"
	Section B., No. 26 Native	"
At Haka	Section D., No. 17 British	"
	Section C., No. 26 Native	" and on line of communication Section D., No. 26 Native Field Hospital.

All outposts will be furnished with suitable medical establishment and equipment on cantonment scale according to strength of garrison. A reserve medical depôt will be established at Kalewa for the purpose of expending all expended medical and surgical equipment, one-third of which will be advanced to Kan and then placed under the charge of the senior medical officer.

The following is the Medical Staff appointed to the Force:—

MR. HUME AND THE CONGRESS.

(Morning Post.)

Mr. Hume, in his letter to the Standing Congress Committees, deals with the balance sheet and remarks:—

"You will observe that I personally have had to pay nearly Rs. 10,000 towards last year's expenses. The reason of this is that the Bombay and Poona Committees have failed, and the Bombay Committee has definitely refused to pay their contributions. For Poona there may be some extenuating circumstances to be stated, though I am not aware of such, but the case of the Bombay Committee appears to me such that I am bound to state it for the information of the country at large. When the agency was in the course of establishment in England by Mr. W. C Bonnerjee representing Bengal, Mr. Dadabbai Naoroji representing Bombay, and Mr. Eardly-Norton representing Madras, I addressed all the Standing Congress Committees, explaining the necessity of such an agency and the work that it would do, and asking each to furnish a certain sum towards the expenses of such an agency, during the then current year, 1888. All the other committees agreed, and, except Poona, sent the money. Bombay replied officially through their secretary, stating that they had passed a resolution to raise the money required, £100, and send it to Mr. Digby. On the faith of this assurance I authorised the expenditure of this and other sums, similarly promised, in England. Time passed, others paid up, but the Bombay Committee did not. I addressed them again and again on the subject, very mildly at first, more strongly later, and finally in the most emphatic terms I could command. I pointed out to them that this was a debt of honour—nay, that, according to recent precedents in the Calcutta High Court, the payment might even, not improbably, be legally enforced; that the money had been spent on their assurance, and that, now, either they must pay it, or I, and that as I had already paid some £500 towards this particular object, besides considerably larger sums in India for kindred objects, it would be outrageous if they left me to bear their burthen, the more so that I actually had not the money to give and should have to borrow it. The upshot of the final reply from Bombay was that they did not consider there had been any breach of faith, because all they meant by their resolution was that, if they did raise the money, they would send it, whereas, as a matter of fact, they were unable to raise it and thus unable to send it. Considering that several members of the committee are infinitely richer men than I am, and could each have paid the whole sum out of a single month's income without the smallest difficulty, this reply seems to me unsatisfactory.

The whole question of the agency must be brought before the Congress formally this year, but why I mention this case now is simply because it is essential that you should all understand how the case stands. We may hold Congresses here in India for ever, but unless we have an active accredited agency in London to push our views and din into the heads of the English public our wrongs and grievances we shall achieve very little. Very far from a rich man, I spend every farthing I can on your work; but I cannot give more than I have. As your general secretary, my bill for postage and printing alone comes to a larger sum than any, but a very few of you subscribe for all political purposes put together, and this is only one of many items for which I have to provide, in part or whole. I am giving up my whole time and thoughts to your cause. I have given up all my own favourite pursuits, and have given away my large collections so that nothing should distract my attention. I am growing old, and yet for months together am kept to work from daylight to dark. My countrymen here, too many of them, abuse me ceaselessly, and the Anglo-Indian papers never weary in circulating some falsehood about me or mine. Now, I care little for all this if any good is to come out of it for India; but, clearly, if you do not, in practice, support our English organisation, which is the only fulcrum on which the lever with which we are to move public opinion in England can work, all our sacrifices are vain; nothing will come of your congresses and committees and organisation here, and as regards me, individually, it is useless for me to worry and weary myself, an exile from my native country and debarred from all those pursuits and studies which to me, are life's chiefest charm, and I must just wash my hands of the matter. I am proud to say that there are hundreds amongst you for whom I have personally a firm friendship; thousands for whom individually I have alike a great respect and regard; but if all these good and worthy, men cannot so combine as to effect the raising yearly, promptly and without my having to dun you for every rupee, of the paltry sum of thirty or forty thousand rupees required for that primary essential, the English agency, then it simply means that you and I have been wrong, and our opponents who declare us unfit for self-government, right; and the sooner I give up the vain attempts of making ropes of what I have hitherto believed to be good fibre, but which, tried by the money test, seems threatening to turn out something very like sand, the better it will be for all of us.

I fear some of you will think this rather strong language, but I must speak plainly or not at all. Had it been only 1888, I might have held my peace, but here again in 1889, while Bombay has declared its inability to contribute anything, although some committees have paid up their shares, and some of them a good deal more than their shares, some to this day have not yet, so far as I am informed, remitted a farthing of the sums they agreed to contribute. It comes to this—I am willing to be stoker, I am proud to be your stoker, but if you will not furnish fuel, your engine must come to a standstill, and then, clearly, I, a veteran, lag superfluous on the stage.

I earnestly entreat you all to consider this matter carefully, and I specially entreat those committees who have not yet paid their contributions for this current year, to do so now at once. Anyhow, I have tried to do my duty; if there be any of you who will not do yours, I am sorry for it, but the fault is not mine.

LORD TENNYSON'S NEW POEMS.

The volume is dedicated to the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, in lines containing the following touching passage making reference to the death of the Poet Laureate's son in India:—

"For he—your India was his Fate,
And drew him over sea to you—
He fain had ranged her thro' and thro',
To serve her myriads and the State,—

"A soul that, watch'd from earliest youth,
And on thro' many a brightening year,
Had never swerved for craft or fear,
By one side-path, from simple truth;

"Who might have chased and clasp Renown
And caught her chaplet here—and there
In haunts of jungle-poison'd air
The flame of life went wavering down;

"But ere he left your fatal shore,
And lay on that funereal boat,
Dying, 'Unspeakable' he wrote
'Their kindness,' and he wrote no more:

"And sacred is the latest word;
And now The was, the Might-have-been,
And those lone rites I have not seen,
And one drear sound I have not heard,

"Are dreams that scarce will let me be,
Not there to bid my boy farewell,
When That within the coffin fell—
Fell and flash'd into the Red Sea,

"Beneath a hard Arabian moon
And alien stars. To question why
The sons before the fathers die,
Not mine! and I may meet him soon;

"But while my life's late eve endures,
Nor settles into hueless grey,
My memories of his briefer day
Will mix with love for you and yours."

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR.

TRICHINOPOLY, DEC. 11.

Early this morning Prince Albert Victor arrived here from Tinnevelly.

His Royal Highness first inspected the rock on which the fort is situated, and then paid a visit to the famous temples on the island of Seringham, subsequently being present at a garden party.

The rock will be illuminated to-night in honour of the Prince's visit.

MADRAS, DEC. 12.

To-day Prince Albert Victor returned here from Trichinopoly.

The city was brilliantly illuminated, and a Native fête was held to-night.

Reuter's Agency, dated from Madras, Dec. 11, states:—"There has been a slight rainfall in the districts of Vizagapatam and Tinnevelly, but none is reported elsewhere. High prices are prevalent in the southern districts, but there are abundant supplies in the north."

ROBBERS.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Robbers by night are in India more troublesome to deal with and to catch than they are in the daytime; the hue and cry which is so effectual in England is seldom taken up with energy in India.

Burglars by night are a source of terror. They dig through walls; they seldom have mercy; they like to torture women. Government has disarmed the owners of property, and there are thousands of ruffians ready to imitate Tantia Bheel, who defied Her Majesty's Government for so many years.

The Punjab is only one of the Provinces of India, but in this province last year more than 22,000 burglaries were committed. Those 22,000 burglaries were committed in a country where the peasantry are very brave, Sikhs and Punjabi Mohammedans.

Is not Parliament bound to inquire into the causes which have led to such a state of things? Is it owing to the English dislike of personal government? Is it owing to the destruction of the authority of district officers by the India Office in London?

I solicit your attention to page 635 of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 20th ult. The editor quotes from the Official Report:—

"In the Rawul Pindi district violent crimes against the person and serious offences against property have risen considerably. Kohat shows a serious increase of violent crime against person and property. Bannu continues to show worse and worse results from year to year, serious offences having steadily increased under all heads."

Bannoo, or Bannu, is a district which was saved from anarchy by Sir Herbert Edwardes in 1847. Sir Herbert was appointed by the greatest Administrator India has ever had, the late Sir Henry Lawrence. Sir Henry's principle of government was to give full power and authority to those whom he selected to have charge of districts; not one of those officers proved unfaithful.

Compare the condition of Bannoo governed by Sir Herbert Edwardes with what it is now.—Your obedient servant,

Dec. 12. T.

PUNJAB STATISTICS.

There is a story told of a native official in the Punjab who on one occasion recorded a death-rate which in ten years would have depopulated the district. His attention was called to the fact, and the following year the death-rate was so reduced and the birth-rate so increased that in ten years there would have been no room for the astounding influx of babies. This too was pointed out, and the third year the figures showed the population to be stationary. Questioned again as to the explanation of these extraordinary fluctuations the accommodating official replied:—"Your Honour objected to too many deaths one year, and to too many births the next; so the third I just made the births and deaths equal." The story may or may not be true; but there can be no doubt that conclusions based on statistical returns have their proverbial uncertainty greatly enhanced in India. What with imperfections in registration and changes in the system of record, the seeker after truth is apt to give up his quest in the disgusted conviction that the Indian Blue-book is deeper even than the Greek philosopher's well. Take, for instance, the case of crime in the Punjab, the record of which for the past year with the Local Government's comments thereon has just been issued. For years back official reports have shown an increase in crime which was positively alarming; but now we are told that "much of the apparent increase is merely nominal, being due to the indiscriminate inclusion in the returns of cognisable cases reported direct to the Magistrates, and to the want of a simple and workable procedure for the discrimination of false cases." This may be all very true; it is the opinion of the Inspector-General of Police and of the Chief Court, and it derives probability from the fact that while the number of cases directly reported to the Magistrates rose enormously last year, the number set down as maliciously false actually decreased; but we are surely entitled to ask why the discovery was not made long ago: why the Inspector-General of Police and the Chief Court have so long suffered the criminal administration of their Province to be unduly blackened when a simple change in the existing system of record would have effectually prevented the error? In the case of vital statistics there are special circumstances which, in the case of the native population, render accuracy unattainable, at least for a long time to come; but there can be no possible reason why cases which come before the law courts of the country should be recorded as true crime when they are nothing of the sort. The Punjab Government has now, it appears, submitted proposals to the Government of India, the object of which is to put the system of recording crime on a sounder basis; but this ought to have been done long ago, and in the meanwhile there must be some doubt as to how far the actual returns ought to be discounted.

THE SEED-CORN OF THE INDIAN EMPIRE.

Three hundred years have well-nigh passed
Since in our favoured land
Right royally there ruled a Queen
Of gracious high command;
And men of mark and wealth of mind
Were gathered round her throne,
As in this grand Victorian age
We still most proudly own.

Her great sea-captains round the world
Went forth for gain or fame,
And by their deeds of daring won
An all-enduring name,
Which neither breath of calumny
Nor headsman's cruel blade
Can cancel from the roll of worth,
Or cast into the shade.

And when the boastful might of Spain
Defiant crossed the sea,
No stronger heart in our dear land
Throbbed with its pulses free;
While valiant men who with the foe
Did battle on the deep,
Well knew their dauntless Lady Queen
Her own would bravely keep.

One thousand and six hundred* was
The year of sovereign grace
In which Elizabeth the Queen,
Of Tudor's regal race,
Vouchsafed to set her hand and seal
To that good Company
Whose Charter first gave right to trade
Beyond the Indian sea.

Into that open furrow then
An Empire's Seed-corn fell
Whose wondrous fruit the wisest men
Dreamt not nor could foretell;
For lo, unto material law
Is linked the law of mind,
And when those two together march
What victory treads behind!

Valour and wisdom won the prize
That crowned their glorious quest;
Wisdom and valour still must bind
The East unto the West;
The Seed-corn that the grand old Queen
Set with her Royal hand
An Empire is—a greater Queen
Rules with her wise command.

The glorious realm we proudly own,
So nobly, dearly won,
Is tending onward to its prime,
Though great things must be done,
From mountain range to ocean bound
Races and diverse creeds
To bind in one harmonious whole,
And meet their utmost needs.

Some sow the seed and others reap,
So teach the ages past,
But they who reap must rightly rule,
To hold the harvest fast;
All honour to the stately Queen
Who sowed that first Seed-corn,
And to the Empress-Queen whose reign
The ripening fruits adorn.

MEETING OF THE MADRAS RAILWAY COMPANY.

The usual half-yearly meeting of the Madras Railway Company was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on Thursday afternoon, some difficulty being found in forming a quorum. In the course of his address, the Chairman, Mr. G. Noble Taylor, said that they had again the satisfaction of presenting to the proprietors a record of continual and marked improvement in the traffic operations of the railway. There was a material increase both in the number of passengers and in the tonnage of goods carried during the past half-year, as well as in the receipts from these sources. The accounts—which showed a guranteed dividend on the capital equal to £3 7s. 8d. per cent.—were then analysed at some length, and suggested improvements discussed. Finally, the Chairman read a letter from the military secretary of Prince Albert Victor to Lord Connemara, stating that the Prince was entirely satisfied with the admirable arrangements which had been made by the company for his journey and arrival at Madras. The report was then adopted unanimously.

SWEDISH ENTERPRISE IN INDIA.

Early this year the Swedish Export Association despatched Herr v. Bildt to India, to endeavour to establish direct business relations between that country and Sweden. Herr Bildt has now rendered an account of his work, from which it appears that his success in Bombay, Madras, and Burma has not been very great, but that in Calcutta he was more fortunate. He found, however, the competition of English houses, with settled connections at home, very great, but succeeded in arranging with certain native houses for a direct import. His difficulties as regards iron and steel were the greater as the natives believed that Swedish iron was made in England. Herr Bildt, therefore, advises that all Swedish iron should be marked "made in Sweden." The Swedish manufactures most in demand are bar iron, agricultural implements, horseshoes, and horseshoe nails. Although Herr Bildt is of opinion that a fair direct trade may be established between Sweden and India, he considers that it cannot be fully developed unless a direct line of steam communication between the two countries is established, agents appointed, and banking relations formed—conditions all of which, in our opinion, require much time to create.—Iron.

THE Nizam's Government has just founded scholarships amounting in all to Rs. 5,000 for distribution among deserving Mahomedan students, whose means will not permit them to obtain higher education. They will be tenable all over India.

ASTHMA CURED,

No matter of how long standing, or how severe, by Dr. SPENCER'S ASTHMA CURE; Price 4/6 and 10/- of Chemists; or free by Parcels Post from us.

Our illustrated book, "ASTHMA, ITS TREATMENT AND CURE," by E. Edwin Spencer, M.A., M.D., &c., &c., will be sent post free by us.

MRS. FLORENCE STONE, Montague Villa, Queen's Road, High Wycombe, says:—

"I have received great benefit from taking Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. For many months I have had an attack come on four nights out of seven, and lately in the day time as well; but since taking your medicine I have only had one slight attack in a month."

MRS. MARY PRICE, Gronant, near Holywell, says:—

"I had suffered for four years with Asthma. I have been now nine months without any attack. I have been cured by Dr. Spencer's Asthma Cure. I can never praise it enough."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, Ilis Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him ! ! I know him not ! ! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him ; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge ! !"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset ! ! ! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous result might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham!—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying —"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 6th Dec.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 4th Dec.; and from Calcutta to the 4th Dec.

TWO meetings of the Legislative Council were to be held in Calcutta before the Christmas holidays, one on the 13th and the other on the 20th Dec. At the former the Central Provinces Municipal and Sanitary Bills were to be passed.

THE new Biluchistan Regulations, as settled by Mr. Scoble and Mr. Hutchins in communication with Sir Robert Sandeman, will, after passing through the Foreign Office, be enacted by the Governor-General in Council. Under these European British subjects will come under the jurisdiction of the Punjab Chief Court.

THE Select Committee on the Indian Railways Bill, the most important measure now on the legislative anvil, will resume work in Calcutta very shortly. The Committee as now composed consists of Mr. Scoble, Sir Charles Elliott, Mr. Hutchins, Mr. Steel, and Sir D. M. Petit, and is to be strengthened by the addition of Mr. Robert Crosthwaite. The Bill will probably be passed in March.

AT the approaching Census Conference Mr. Denzil Ibbetson will represent the Punjab, Mr. White the North-West, Mr. Drysdale the Central Provinces, Mr. Bourdillon Bengal, and Mr. Coppleston Burma. Mr. F. A. Baines, Census Commissioner, who represents Bombay, will preside. The above gentlemen assisted at the Census of ten years ago, and after giving the Commissioner the benefit of their experience on that occasion with a view to shaping his plans for the coming one, will make way for younger men. The business of enumeration will probably commence two or three months in advance of February, 1891.

THE Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne left Lahore on Wednesday evening, Nov. 27th. Their Excellencies travelled straight through by special train to Calcutta, arriving there on Saturday morning. Before leaving Lahore the Viceroy gave an interview to the members of the Kashmir Council of Regency, including Rajas Amar Singh and Ram Singh, the Maharaja's brothers.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR has during the past week been entertained at Mysore, where he also witnessed some interesting elephant-catching operations, and enjoyed some shooting. His Royal Highness left the State on Monday for Courtallum, where he arrived on Dec. 4th.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has returned to Bombay from Aden, where he went a few days ago on inspection duty.

AMONGST the arrivals in India are the Right Hon. Mr. Childers, M.P., and Mrs. Childers.

LORD CONNEMARA was to proceed on another tour on Dec. 19th. Cocanada and Godavery will be visited, and his Excellency returns to Madras on Jan. 3rd.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN was to leave Allahabad for Benares about Dec. 19th. A durbar was to be held at Ramnagar on the 21st., at which his Honour would instal the new Maharaja. Sir Auckland will also investigate on the spot the nature and scope of the drainage and water-supply scheme.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT, Public Works Member, has arrived in Calcutta, also General Chesney.

SIR CHARLES CROSTHWAITE arrived in Calcutta on Dec. 2nd, and left for Burma on the arrival of the English mail.

MR. A. P. MACDONNELL, Home Secretary, intends taking eight months' leave from April next.

MR. JUSTICE ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER, whose health has been failing for some time past, will resign his seat in the Calcutta High Court at Christmas.

MAJOR-GENERAL COLLEN, Military Secretary, has been detained in Bombay for some days by a sharp touch of fever. He is, however, convalescent again, and is now in Calcutta.

MR. C. J. LYALL, on the return of Mr. MacDonnell from Burma by the second week of this month, reverts to his appointment in Assam.

MR. C. R. HAWKINS resigns the Bengal Civil Service from the 8th of November.

MR. J. W. NEILL is gazetted to officiate as Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, Mr. Robert Crosthwaite continuing in the Legislative Council during the whole Calcutta Session.

MR. HARVEY JAMES, Secretary in the Legislative Department, returns in time for the first Council meeting on Dec. 13th.

THE Additional Commissionership of Benares, sanctioned for a term of six months, came to a close at the end of last month, and is not to be renewed. Mr. J. H. Twigg, who has been holding the appointment, upon its abolition takes refuge in privilege leave.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL COLLETT, who has just returned from England, will consult with the Bengal authorities regarding the precautionary measures necessary on the Cachar frontier against the Lushais before proceeding to take up his command in Assam.

A MELANCHOLY tragedy occurred at Dessa on Nov. 25th. It appears that Colonel Heyland, 1st Bombay Lancers, hearing that a sowar was running amuck in the lines, rode down to the spot, and, meeting the man, fired at him, but missed. The sowar then fired, wounding Colonel Heyland mortally. The sowar had previously shot the Ressaldar-Major, who died the same day, and the Native Adjutant, who is doing well. Colonel Heyland was buried with full military honours, the whole station attending the funeral. His loss, independent of the manner of it, will long be regretted in the Bombay army.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR has visited a number of towns in the Madras Presidency during the past week, and has everywhere met with a most cordial reception.

AT the annual communication of the Grand Lodge of All Scottish Freemasonry in India, held at Freemasons' Hall, Byculla, on Dec. 2nd, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught was presented with the patent of his appointment as Honorary Grand Master of All Scottish Freemasonry in India.

AN attempt has been made upon the life of Sir Asman Jah. No particulars have transpired even at Hyderabad, except that the would-be-assassin is in custody, and that the whole matter is to be immediately investigated.

ONE of the questions connected with Upper Burma, which is likely to come up for disposal shortly, is the future organisation of the military police battalions. Local regiments may possibly be formed out of the material available as the force is reduced.

A SCHEME for administrative reorganisation in the North-West Provinces and Oudh, as submitted by the local Government, is now under consideration by the Government of India.

THE Leprosy Bill is not likely to be brought up for some time, as the authorities consulted have not all replied.

TANTIA BHEEL was hanged on Wednesday morning, Dec. 4th. He ascended the scaffold firmly.

A REPORT has been received from Khatmandu that the powder-room in the Nepal Government magazine there blew up on the 21st ult., and that nine persons were seriously injured in the explosion.

NEWS has been received in Cashmere of Captain Younghusband's safe arrival at Gilgit after a most difficult and adventurous journey.

THE Chinese Amban is still at Rinchagong waiting to see if the Government of India reopen Sikkim negotiations, and Mr. Hart will remain at Darjeeling.

AN application is being made, on behalf of the Sikh community of the Punjab, for permission to present an address to H.R.H. Prince Albert Victor on the occasion of his visit to Lahore.

NOTES.

IF Prince Albert Victor disappointed the courtiers of Bombay by making his appearance in their harbour six hours before he was expected he has made up for the undue haste by arriving several hours too late at Rangoon. This, however, was owing to no want of punctuality—that pride of Princes—on his part, but owing to the angry weather. However, he received, of course, a splendid welcome, and found a prosperous and contented Native population ready to receive him with acclamation as the grandson of their Queen-Empress and their, possibly, future King. He will eat his Christmas dinner at Mandalay, where peace and progress reign too. What better answer than this fact can be given to the cavillers against annexation, and to all the false prophets who predicted evil as the consequence of British interference in Upper Burma?

THE other latest news from India will be found in the telegram from the Times' correspondent wired from Calcutta yesterday. It is a matter of regret to hear of backward legislation such as that attributed to the Bengal Legislative Council; but it is to be hoped that the vigorous protests made by the Commercial members will have the desired effect.

THE MAHARAJA OF DHURBHANGA has thrown in his lot with the Congress agitators because they have promised to agitate for an extension of the Permanent Settlement. Here is a change of front indeed! What will his friend Sir Roper Lethbridge say to this?

WE do not know, says the Pioneer, how far the Bombay Gazette may be in the confidence and councils of the Congress; but according to that paper's statement, as summarised in the telegrams, of the programme of the forthcoming meeting, the National party means to start this year on an entirely new line. Arms Act repeal, Native Volunteers, and the like are to be altogether in the background; the magazines of physical forces and the possession of the keys thereto will be ostracised subjects. Instead we are to have discussions on an Imperial guarantee for the Indian debt, on the reimposition of the customs, the abolition of the silver-plate duties, with, of course, the Legislative Councils as a pièce de résistance. A great advance in sanity, no doubt; but what a colourless contrast beside the gorgeous hues of the Star in the East and the Old Man's Hope. And will the same minds that were allured by these care to go on devoting their time and money to the ventilation of the lifeless matters of political economy?

THE same paper has the following:—"The Bombay merchants had some time ago to memorialise Government regarding the needlessly vexatious and injurious manner in which the provisions of the Merchandise Marks Acts were enforced in Bombay, and from all we can learn Calcutta will be compelled to take a similar step. One merchant, for instance, recently had a consignment of expensive silks and satins imported, cut, as is the use with goods of this sorts, in dress lengths. The Customs officials had the boxes opened, and insisted on stamping the number of yards on each piece. The goods were then folded, and the grease of the stamp penetrated the folds, with the result that the consignment was utterly ruined. It is intolerable that traders should be subjected to loss in this fashion. The Merchandise Marks Act was a very necessary measure, but it was never intended to operate as an instrument of annoyance and injury. It is to be hoped that Government will instruct the Customs authorities at Calcutta to exercise a little more care and discrimination in their work. A hint of this sort had a good effect in Bombay, and it would certainly seem to be time to repeat the experiment in Calcutta."

THE Englishman makes the following reference to a recent incident:—"Mr Justice Parsons has explained that he went to Mr. King's dinner under the impression that it was not to be of a political character, and that there would be no attack on the policy of Government. After reading the full report of the proceedings it is difficult to see how Mr. Justice Parsons can excuse his extraordinary conduct; but in the light of his "explanation" it would almost seem as if he had set himself deliberately to bring discredit upon his entertainers. Mr. Justice Scott and the other speakers were strongly of opinion that nothing had been said that could be construed into an offence, and we are glad to hear that several prominent members of the Bombay Civil Service have made it known that they disclaim all sympathy with the judicial protestant. These Civilians have written expressing pain and regret at the incident, and, indeed, in doing this they are not going too far, for the interruption may well be held to cast a reflection upon the good sense and good breeding of all who are likely to be in any way associated with the touchy, wrong-headed judge. It may well be asked how it was that Mr. Justice Parsons, who is such a stickler for the forms of propriety, refused to fall in with the views of his brother judges, preferring to act in haughty independence, and to abandon his learned brothers to the general disgrace. His friends, however, must allow Mr. Justice Parsons some credit for a farcical vein of humour; it is a new and daring idea for a High Court Judge to figure as the Jenny Geddes of the Civil Service. If he had appeared in his robe and armed himself with a 'cutty stool' the dramatic effect would have been perfect. On the whole, the incident is likely to be food for the hilarity of the Uncovenanted for some time to come, and also to some extent of chagrin to the members of the judicial joker's own service."

Palmam qui meruit ferat is a motto oftener quoted than acted upon by the distributors of honours and patronage in high quarters. It certainly was not acted upon in the case of the late General Paton, and our readers will, we think, readily endorse the views which a contemporary has put forward on this point:—"General J. S. Paton, Bengal Staff Corps, wore five war medals, and had been twenty-seven times mentioned in despatches for his services in the Gwalior, Sutlej, Punjab, Afreedee (1850), and Mutiny Campaigns, in all of which he took an active part; yet he died a simple C.B. How different must the record have been of the honours and rewards for the campaigns that preserved to us our Indian Empire from the big distributions which nowadays follow every little action! One is not disposed to grudge soldiers their decorations, &c.; but in honouring the warriors of Egypt and the Soudan, men like General Paton, hidden away in the obscurity of retirement, are apt to be forgotten, notwithstanding their well-established claims. Considering the large number of meritorious officers there are for whom there is no prospect of recognition under the present system, it would be a gracious act on the part of the Sovereign to issue a special Gazette—to mark the services of those survivors of the old campaigns, who would otherwise be shut out from all hope of promotion in and appointment to the several orders of knighthood. A man who was twenty-seven times mentioned, and filled the important office of Quartermaster-General in India, deserved a better fate than to die a C.B."

THE following, if non vero, is at all events ben trovato:—A Burman barrister in Rangoon, who applied some time ago for a license to possess a gun, but who was refused a license on the ground that he was not a landholder, has purchased a piece of land in the Burmese cemetery measuring six feet by three. He is now entitled to obtain a license.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 22.

At the last meeting of the Indian Legislative Council Mr. Hutchins obtained leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Writing, Press, and Books Act. The object is to follow the English law in requiring publishers to make a free presentation to Government of all their publications. The existing law of payment by Government had, he said, led to extortion, as fictitious prices had been placed on worthless books for the sole purpose of obtaining those prices from the Government. The Council has adjourned for a fortnight.

At a meeting of the Bengal Council yesterday the President, in opening the session, said new rules had been drawn up for the disposal of business which it would be necessary for a special committee to consider and report upon. The only important measure likely to occupy the time of members and lead to protracted discussion was his Bill to amend and consolidate the law relating to the port of Calcutta. The report of the special committee on this Bill has been presented. The two commercial members have written minutes of dissent, protesting against the principle of confiscation and spoliation sought to be legalised and confirmed by the Bill. Mr. Moore points out in a very forcible minute the inequitable and mischievous character of the power proposed to be conferred on the Commissioners in all cases of extension of the port to remove and destroy all buildings which may have been erected prior to such extension without formal sanction by the local government and without making any compensation. This power of arbitrary confiscation, he says, would be a serious blow dealt at commercial interests, and would imperil mills and other commercial property exceeding in value 1,00,00,000 rupees. Corporations are proverbially high-handed, and the callous conduct of the Government in like cases in the past by no means justifies unlimited confidence in their commercial justice in the future.

Public opinion will fully support this protest. It is by measures of crude legislation of this character that trade and industries are so frequently disorganised, and the employment of English capital in India is discouraged. The Port Commissioners are already clothed with excessive and arbitrary powers, which have been jealously criticised by the public for some time. Instead of extending these powers the present opportunity should be seized to reduce and more rigidly limit the possibilities of their abuse.

The Maharajah of Benares was installed by the Lieutenant-Governor yesterday amidst public rejoicings. Large numbers of guests were entertained, and the event was celebrated by an evening party at the Naudesav Kothi. The memory of the late Maharajah is held in great respect and veneration by both Natives and Europeans.

The Maharajah of Durbhanga has thrown in his lot with the native Congress agitators, for the lofty patriotic reason that better terms are more likely to be extorted from the Government by siding with the Opposition than by supporting the Executive, in addition to which the Congress leaders have promised landowners, if they will join the movement, to agitate for an extension of the permanent settlement. It is amazing that the Maharajah, who hitherto has enjoyed the reputation of being sagacious and high-minded, should have fallen into so patent a pitfall, and, actuated by principles of the very narrowest self interest, should have consented to join the ranks of a class of men whose principles and preachings are entirely hostile to the vested interests and established privileges of his order.

The occasion on which the Maharajah proclaimed the grounds of his conversion was the recent meeting of Behar landholders. In the course of his speech, when protesting against the rumoured intention of the Government to promote education by means of an educational cess, he said those who thought they would get concessions from the Government by not joining the Congress would find themselves mistaken. The Talookdars of Oude abstained as a body from joining the last Congress, but the Patwari Cess Act was shortly after passed. The Congress intended to pass a resolution favouring the extension of the permanent settlement to those parts of India where it was not now in force; thus those who feared the Congress programme as radical and as inimical to the interests of the landholders would find that the Congress was a better respecter of vested rights under the permanent settlement than others. He could see no reason, therefore, why landholders should not join the movement.

Sir Madhava Rao has issued a circular letter strongly urging marriage reform and recommending the educated community to memorialise the Government to clothe the results of their efforts with legislative sanctions. It is felt by many leading Natives that the existence of the horrible custom of child marriage is an affront, not only to the first principles of civilisation, but is in direct violation of the ordinary laws of morality and humanity, and that the Government would be equally justified in suppressing its abuses as in dealing with the social crime of widow cremation.

The famous Tirupati Temple prosecution still continues. It has already lasted ten days. Twenty-six witnesses have been examined, and fourteen remain. The witnesses for the defence number 120.

At the Bombay Central Rifle Meeting the Durham Light Infantry carried off the Civil Service and Bombay Cups, the Lancashire Fusiliers the Musketry Cup, the Royal Fusiliers the Volunteer Cup, S Battery Royal Horse Artillery Lord Wantage's Cup and the Duchess of Connaught's prize, the Durham Light Infantry the Rao of Cutch's prize, and the Lancaster Regiment the Commander-in-Chief's prize. The Lancashire Fusiliers' gold medal was won by Private Pocock, of the Royal Fusiliers.

The selected auxiliary cavalry concentrate at Lahore on January 20, and will eventually proceed to the cavalry camp at Meinohi.

In compliance with the request of the Cashmere Council the services of Colonel Neville Chamberlain have been placed at their disposal for two years, in order that he may assist in the reorganisation of the Cashmere Army. This will probably lead to the abolition of compulsory service. Colonel Chamberlain will be directly controlled by and will be responsible to the Cashmere Council.

The Ameer of Afghanistan is making preparations for an extensive system of telegraphic intercommunication. This may probably lead later to railway construction.

A serious gunpowder explosion occurred recently at Bhiwandi; twenty-two persons were injured.

The Calcutta Trades Association has written to the Government urging the immediate repeal of the duties on silver plate, and the abolition of the objectionable system of compulsory hall-marking.

Considerable dissatisfaction is expressed at the Government proposal to extend the income-tax to profits on goods consigned by non-residents to agents in India. It is pointed out that these consignments only represent a fraction of the general business, whereas at present the balance of profit on the aggregate year's transactions in all directions constitutes the taxable profit. A gain may be made in Calcutta, but this may be exceeded by a loss in Melbourne. To tax Calcutta profits would, in such a case, compel a non-resident to pay income-tax on an ultimate loss. It will greatly prejudice Indian trade if the Government persist in giving effect to this proposal, and will excite considerable opposition and dissatisfaction.

The advance of the Lushai column has been impeded by an outbreak of cholera amongst the coolies. Prompt measures have been adopted to stamp out the disease by rigid segregration and the burning of infected sheds. General Tregear left for Fort Lungleh yesterday. The latest orders and the distribution of the force are as follows:—To make a road to Haka and to punish the Jahoota, half a company of Sappers, 160 of the 9th Bengal Infantry, a wing of the 2nd and a wing of the 4th Goorkhas, 600 of the Bombay Pioneers, and 100 Frontier Police. To punish the northern tribes, half a company of Sappers, 400 of the 2nd Goorkhas, 250 of the 3rd Bengal Infantry, and 100 of the Bombay Pioneers. This column is under the command of Colonel Skinner. The line of communication from Rangamati to Lungleh will be held by the 3rd Bengal Infantry. The Howlongs have acknowledged our supremacy and are assisting in road-making. The route, therefore, of the northern column will pass through the territory of active allies up to within one day's march of Lienpangu.

The Indian Government have refused to reopen the case of the dismissed Bombay Native officials. In rejecting the appeals the Government letter to the Bombay Government says:—"There is no reason given in your letter why the appeals have been forwarded." The letter then proceeds to give argumentative reasons for the refusal of the Government to entertain the appeals.

Mr. Curwen, the popular and able editor of the Times of India, has been appointed by Royal decree a Knight of the Swedish Order of Vasa.

Professor Forrest, who has been so successful in editing the official records of Bombay, has been appointed by the Government of India to examine and report upon the valuable collection of historical records which up to this time have remained scattered over the various offices without any systematic attempt to arrange them for reference and publication.

BURMA.

RANGOON, DEC. 22.

Prince Albert Victor arrived at Rangoon from Madras on the 20th inst. He received a loyal and cordial welcome from all races and classes. The town presented a brilliant appearance. Beautiful and elaborate arches, displaying the decorative skill and loyalty of the principal communities of Rangoon, were erected along the route traversed by the Prince. The Chinese arch consisted of a palatial three-storyed building, gorgeously decorated. The Burmese arch was characteristic and beautiful. The Germans, who form an important section of the mercantile community and have great interests in Rangoon, erected a special arch. It was announced that the Prince would arrive at eight o'clock, and by that hour a large and representative gathering had assembled at the wharf, and the streets were densely crowded. Owing to the steamer experiencing rough weather the Prince did not arrive until after midday; but the crowds patiently waited. On his landing, Mr. Norton, president of the Rangoon Muncipality and chairman of the reception committee, presented his Royal Highness with an address, stating that the citizens of Rangoon, which flourishing city claimed to rank third in commercial importance in India, who were of many nationalities, speaking diverse languages and holding various creeds, had united in welcoming the Prince and expressing their loyalty to the Queen-Empress. Mr. Norton then asked the Prince's acceptance of a beautiful silver casket presented by the citizens, and handed him the address, enclosed in an exquisitely carved ivory case.

The Prince made a brief reply, stating the pleasure he felt in visiting one of the latest additions to the British Empire and becoming personally acquainted with the Burmese, whom he had heard described as amongst the most prosperous and happiest of the Queen's Asiatic subjects. His Royal Highness proceeded to Government House through streets lined with troops. He was escorted by a guard of mounted European Volunteers. In the evening he attended a ball at the Town-hall, given in his honour by the citizens; 600 persons were present. Yesterday the Prince visited the great Pagoda, the noblest and the most sacred of the Burmese Buddhist shrines. Except the Prince's personal staff, some officials, and one or two others, no Europeans were present. The crowd filling the vast platform of the Pagoda consisted exclusively of well-dressed Burmans, who in their brilliantly-coloured costumes formed a most striking spectacle. In the afternoon the Prince attended some Burmese sports and boat-races at the Royal lakes. A vast crowd was present. The Prince was more enthusiastically received that on his landing, as the people were then wearied by the long delay. His Royal Highness presented the prizes to the winners. In the evening he was present at a grand display of fireworks on the lakes.

To-day the Prince dines with General Gordon. To-morrow he formally opens the new drainage works, constructed by Messrs. Shone and Ault on their system, and attends a public breakfast given by the same firm, to which large numbers are invited. In the evening the Prince leaves by train for Mandalay, arriving on the evening of the 24th. After staying there three days he returns to Rangoon, sailing down the Irrawaddy in the Beeloo, a splendid steamer of the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, which, specially fitted up regardless of expense, forms a floating palace. During the voyage the Prince will be the guest of the company. His Royal Highness has a made a most favourable impression on the people.

According to the Rast Goftar, Mr. Dhruva, who is a graduate of the Bombay University, and who is a judge in one of the courts of his Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda, went the other day at Nassik through the prayaschit, or purification ceremony, on his arrival in India from Europe, where he had been to attend the Oriental Congress. Mr. Dhruva has thus, by means of a ceremony which involves the eating of foul things, washed off his "sin" caused by crossing the "black waters." The Rast regrets that a man of Mr. Dhruva's education and enlightenment should set such a bad example to those Hindoos who may wish to proceed to Europe. The writer exhorts the Indians to follow in the footsteps of the late Mr. Karsandas Mulji, one of the greatest and most self-sacrificing reformers India has produced.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

BOMBAY v. MANCHESTER.

(Madras Mail.)

We have frequently alluded to the great wrong that was done to India by the abolition of the light duties imposed upon British cotton goods on their entry into this country, whereby India was a loser to the extent of some two millions sterling per annum. When first India entered into competition with Lancashire in the production of cotton goods, the latter affected to ignore the former; but so serious did the rivalry between the two countries become, that Lancashire, sensible of the losses she was sustaining through the competition, became alarmed, and brought so much pressure to bear upon Parliament that the duties were abolished. Fancying that she was now safe from any further detrimental competition on the part of India, she calmly awaited the issue of events. Undeterred, however, by the adverse conditions under which she was now compelled to work, India, or rather Bombay—for here the great mass of the cotton business is carried on—"set to" with renewed vigour, on her up-hill task, and so determined and conscientious has been her work, that Lancashire has again had to seek for a new excuse for further hampering the Indian mills. Her cry is now "fair play!" At an "influential conference" of the cotton trade, held at Blackburn, during the week ending the 26th ultimo, a resolution was passed to the effect that the Home Government should be called upon to enforce the English Factories Acts in India, "with a view to reduce the excessive hours of toil" in the mills in this country. The object, as an English contemporary points out, is an excellent one, but, at the same time, "this is just the very sort of question on which the people of India ought to be allowed to judge for themselves." The Globe, for that is the paper from which we have quoted above, is about the only paper which has taken the sensible and just view of the question. The people of India, says our contemporary:—

"May consider that, on the whole, it is better for their cotton operatives to work unduly hard than to go without work altogether. That is what might easily come to pass were the Factory Acts strictly applied to the Indian industry. Asiatics work far more slowly than Europeans; in many cases they require twice the time to accomplish equal results. To limit Indian women and children, therefore, to the hours which obtain in English mills would practically drive them out of the labour market. Nor can it even be alleged that the supposed sufferers make complaint of being 'downtrodden.' They recognise the supreme importance of keeping on its legs the industry which affords them a living, and if there be any discontent among them, it is on the ground of insufficient remuneration, and not of excessive toil."

What the result of this recent action on the part of the Lancashire Cotton interest will be has yet to be seen, but unless the Government is firm, India may have again to give in to Lancashire. No one would be so foolish as to suppose that Lancashire has any concern about Indian operatives except as commercial rivals who are likely to become formidable in numbers and skill. The argument that the hours of labour should not be longer in any part of Her Majesty's Empire than they are permitted to be in the United Kingdom is plausible, but Lancashire would not venture to ask that it might be applied to Australia or Canada. Why, then, it may be asked, should Lancashire be permitted to shape the labour regulations of India to suit herself?

SRIMAN SWAMI'S MOVEMENT.

(Indian Daily News.)

Putting aside the question whether the Government would be justified in declaring that its European, Eurasian, and Mahommedan subjects shall not be allowed to eat beef because the Hindoos object to cattle being killed. The prohibition of cattle slaughter would not improve matters. The real causes of the inferiority of Indian cattle, both in quality and number—if their number is deficient for the useful purposes for which they are required—lie in the want of attention to breeding and rearing, and the insufficiency of food at certain times of the year. During the hot weather hundreds of Indian cattle die off for want of sufficient sustenance, and when the rains come and the grass grows, hundreds more die from the effects of eating more freely than they have been able to do for months. In seasons of drought the cattle mortality, always high at these periods of the year, reaches enormous figures, because there is no provision made for such emergencies. Sriman Swamy would be able to effect a marked improvement in Indian cattle if he could induce cattle breeders and owners—generally the cultivators in India—to devote more care and attention to breeding and raising healthy animals, and to exercise more forethought to provide them with a sufficiency of suitable fodder throughout the year. To what extent has the system of ensilage been adopted amongst Indian cultivators? A general adoption of this system alone would preserve many hundreds of cattle which now die off through want of food in the hot months, or through the surfeit which follows a long course of semi-starvation when the advent of the monsoon causes the grass to spring up again in the parched fields. Then, again, where is any attempt made, outside the Government farms, to cultivate grass crops? Is it not the fact that no effort whatever is made in this direction, but that the cattle are simply turned loose to support a precarious existence on the grass fodder that grows spontaneously? Experience has shown that grass crops can be cultivated, and the surplus of abundant seasons stored successfully and at no great cost to supply the deficiency of the hot months or years of drought. But the cultivators are too ignorant—or perhaps rather too apathetic—to take simple precautions. The Indian cultivators, if only shown how, and convinced of the necessity for their learning, can do more than prohibition of cattle slaughter would ever accomplish (supposing the Government could enforce such a measure), for the improvement and increase of the country's wealth in cattle. Let the efforts of reformers take the direction of promptingand encouraging improved breeding and improved care of the animal population, and there can be nothing but the warmest approval. But to make economic considerations an excuse for advocating measures that would effect class and religious susceptibilities—and would afford no remedy after all—is a course that must fail, and deserves no sympathy.

THE BURMA HONOURS.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The new list of honours for services in Burma which the Central News Agency has telegraphed to us includes three names which will be read in the Bombay Presidency with no little pleasure. The list adds three to the honours which have already been awarded to the first Beluchis. Besides the V.C. so deservedly given to the plucky Dr. Crimmin, and the Distinguished Service Order given to Captain Sinclair for his services in the Nyingan District, the decoration of C.B. has been bestowed upon Colonel George Sartorius, the Commandant, the Distinguished Service Order going to Lieutenant Fowler and Lieutenant Tighe. Thus the first Beluchis gained five decorations during the two and a-half years which they spent in Burma. The many friends whom Colonel Sartorius possesses in Bombay will be gratified to hear of this recognition of the arduous and skilful work which he did in Burma. Arduous the work undoubtedly was, for the British force had to deal with a foe as ubiquitous as that which Hoche confronted in La Vendee, and often as difficult to approach. Work such as that which Colonel Sartorius had to do do for the greater part of two years would test the ingenuity, the fertility of resource, and the patience of any Commander. It was guerilla warfare, in which the chief hope of success lay in a clever combination of night marches with sudden and rapid pursuit of a lurking and wary enemy. The price of success in dealing with such an enemy is unfailing and unvarying vigilance, and Colonel Sartorius paid it, and got a full return in results for the outlay, Lieutenant Fowler, who gets the D.S.O., distinguished himself by a very smart night surprise of the freebooter Twet Nga Lu, whom, with the help of half a dozen men of the Rifle Brigade, he seized in bed preparatory to Colonel Sartorius's entrance into the town in charge of the main body of the column. His other exploit was an attack upon a stockade south of Maukine, in which the enemy were beaten by a small force of eighty men, leaving behind them a bundred and fifty killed and wounded, at the cost of a single flesh wound on our side. Lieutenant Tighe did equally meritorious service in the advance on Saulon, the Karen capital. The Beluchis came out of the campaign with unqualified credit, and we are glad to see that the authorities have in this practical way confirmed all the complimentary things that have been said about the regiment and its officers in despatches and official telegrams.

THE LAHORE DIOCESAN SYNOD AND THE SABBATH.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Much was heard of regret that the church festival—"the Lord's day"—was less observed than it was twenty years ago. But is this so? Twenty years ago it was not the fashion either in conversation or in magazines to discuss religion. Members who did not actually believe the facts and doctrines taught in Church yet gave in a sort of decent external adhesion. They showed up at church at eleven o'clock, and with many yawns and much feeling of boredom closed the whist-table at the club, and dozed over the Sunday newspaper. Nowadays, those who do not believe have no hesitation in stating their opinions as incisively as they please. Every one, socialist, agnostic, or whatever he may be, will give in to the idea of a day of rest from the grinding toil of the Bank and the Court-house, but unless he really believes that on that day he ought to celebrate a particular event which churchmen profess to believe, naturally "rest" for him will mean a good sleep, or a day in the open air after snipe, or a picnic in the country, as his health and inclination suggest. Unless a man can really believe the scriptural fact which gives Sunday any sacred character, how can he do otherwise? Is anything gained by encouraging him to give a forced and formal observance? On the other hand, if there is reality in the belief, then it will find reasonable expression without the round of formal restrictions—"you may do this: you may not do that"—which belong to a Jewish, not a Christian ideal. The tendency of argument nowadays, in face of the natural difficulty which people feel about miracles and mysterious doctrines, is to appeal to the practical effect of faith in the Divine Personality. But those who put forward this argument must be careful to make it good by showing plainly that what they profess is real; that it truly affects their character and conduct. If gatherings like this Synod stir people up either to make their belief real, or else let it go for something that is real, if they can find such, then they will have done no little good. Certainly isolation is one of the difficulties of a churchman's life at all but a very few stations; and isolation is very apt to breed stagnation of all beliefs. We may hope that the large gathering of 1889 will have been a help to many in this respect. We may now take leave of the subject, trusting that future meetings may be even better attended and still more successful than this. We cannot, however, help congratulating the Bishop on the distinct advance made in the attendance of representative laymen, and trust that the plan of electing delegates, as it becomes better understood, will be more and more appreciated

THE MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT.

(Pioneer.)

Manufacturers at home are evidently realising the advantages conferred on them by the Merchandise Marks Act, and by the adoption of similar legislation in many parts of our possessions abroad. We observe from an account of the autumnal meeting of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom that a resolution was recently sent up from Bradford asking Her Majesty's Government to promote the extension of the Trades Marks Act of 1883 and the Merchandise Marks Act of 1887 throughout all the colonies. Further, a conference is to be held at Madrid early next year with the object of securing, as far as possible, the protection of trades marks in foreign countries where such enactments are not in force. This is proof that the important effects of the Merchandise Marks Act on those branches of industry in England which are largely dependent on their exports are coming to be more fully recognised. The result of so many markets, once profitable, being practically closed against cheap counterfeit English wares has been to turn the attention of Continental traders to other distant lands where inconvenient Marks Acts do not exist, and in a neighbourly way to adjacent States where their spurious articles bearing the badges of British makers can still pass unchallenged the barriers of the Customs. At the abovementioned meeting the subject of inferior foreign commodities being palmed off as English in China, Eastern Europe, and other markets formed one of the topics of discussion, and reference was made to a report from the Consul at Sofia to the Foreign Office urging the desirability of commercial agents visiting the country with the view of exposing frauds of this nature which are proving of great detriment to British commerce. An English Trade Review in the course of some remarks in the same connection, states that an endless variety of German and Austrian made goods bearing the names of English manufactures are being largely introduced into Servia, and quotes a glaring instance of how a tradesman in Belgrade had been thus victimised. An order was given through the Hamburg agent of a firm in Scotland for Scotch tweeds, which turned out so inferior in quality that the purchaser, with commendable shrewdness, wrote direct to the manufacturer demanding an explanation. A reply was received to the effect that the cloth was not from his looms, but was of German make. From all this, as well as from other analogous cases we have been able to adduce, it would appear that it is not cheap labour alone which has enabled pushing German manufacturers to undersell their English competitors abroad.

THE KASHMIR RESIDENCY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We lately drew a contrast between the methods employed for the reform of the administration of Kashmir, and the process apparently deemed sufficient for evolving a picked corps from the Kashmir troops. We would not, however, be therefore understood as implying that the civil reforms are perfect. If ceremonial forty-eight hour visits of the British Resident would not suffice for supervision of the State affairs, neither—though in a lesser degree—will the present, unwisely economical process long suffice. Colonel Nisbet may have all the administrative ability of long experience, and may fortunately retain all the energy of youth; but the mass of work piled on his shoulders, over and above the usual duties of a British Resident, would abundantly justify the strengthening of the Residency by the addition of a permanent Assistant to the Resident, however able and energetic the latter may be. Or, if the mass of business with which one man is vainly expected to cope offers insufficient argument in the view of the Foreign Office or the Secretary of State, let them at any rate recognise the divided condition of affairs in Kashmir and appoint a First Class Political officer to Jammu. If the Maharajah had been advised—and had acted upon the advice that, although separated from the actual administration, his presence at the head-quarters of the Council governing in his name would be desirable, there might have been no necessity. But when we recollect that Maharajah Pertab Singh is a ruling prince of the first importance in India, who may at any time be again entrusted with the reins of power, and that he holds his court far apart from the Council and the British Resident, we feel sure that a case has been made out for the appointment of a Political Agent at His Highness's capital. If this were done, perhaps we might also feel sure that there would be no more such curious spectacles presented to the world as the ruler of a Native State and the Viceroy of India carrying on a political correspondence, subsequently published in all the papers, over the head of the accredited representative of the Viceroy in that State. A British Resident's devotion to duty was, we think, never more conspicuously displayed than the silence with which this compromising situation was accepted by Colonel Nisbet; but, until some new arrangement, such as we have suggested, precludes it, the Maharajah has every right to regard the recent correspondence as a precedent, and to continue writing letters to the Viceroy upon State affairs. The inconvenience of such proceedings, behind the backs of the State Council and the British Resident, who are responsible for the proper government of the country, needs no comment.

Digitized by Google

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND FREEMASONRY IN INDIA.

(Times of India.)

The gathering of the Scottish Freemasons in Bombay last Monday (Dec. 2) was an event that will be of interest to the whole Masonic world. No less than thirty-one Lodges working under the Grand Lodge of Scottish Freemasons in India sent their representatives to give greeting to his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, on the occasion of the presentation of the patent of his appointment as Honorary Grand Master of All Scottish Freemasonry in India. They came from every part of the country, and were of almost every caste and creed. Their Bombay brethren had spared neither pains nor money to render the reception and banquet worthy of so auspicious an occasion and so illustrious a visitor, and an open-handed welcome was extended to the leading officers of the Lodges working under the English Constitution. Sir Henry Morland, the Grand Master of All Scottish Freemasonry in India, of course presided at the meeting, and in his courteous and genial speeches had much to tell his audience that was absolutely new to them. He comes fresh from England, and brought more than one cheering message to the craft. He announced, in the first place—and the announcement is probably new to all of us—that Her Gracious Majesty the Queen-Empress is about to become the patroness of Freemasonry in England as an acknowledgment of the loyalty of her Masonic subjects, and he hinted that the might probably become the patroness of Freemasonry in Scotland and Ireland also. In the second place, he announced that the Duke of Fife, the husband of the Princess Louise, would shortly be installed as Grand Master on the throne of Scottish Freemasonry. The Prince of Wales is, of course, at the head of the English Masons at home, and the Duke of Connaught, who was present in the capacity of Honorary Grand Master of All Scottish Freemasonry in India, is also Grand Master of the English Constitution here. It was natural, then, that he should speak of the intimate connection that has always existed between our Royal family and the Craft—a connection that is unhappily wanting in most European countries. "I am certain," he said, "that with the Queen-Empress as our patron, and the Prince of Wales as the Grand Master of the English Constitution, we will carry all the other Constitutions together with us." For the present fortunate state of things in India we are indebted mainly to the Duke of Connaught himself. It has always been his aim that the two Constitutions should work together hand in hand and in brotherly fellowship and harmony. But in this country Freemasonry is something more than English or Scottish. It is Indian, and absolutely the only "national" tie that binds together the diversified people of this congeries of nations. In India Freemasonry is a strong social and civilising power, and its pioneers are silently and unostentatiously doing admirable work. This was very aptly put by Sir Henry Morland. "Freemasonry," he said, "has the power of blending the different castes and religions of this vast Continent, and those who belonged to it have for their aim brotherly love, truth, and benevolence. I feel that if we were to spread Freemasonry wider and wider throughout this country we shall be doing a noble and a great act for the various races that inhabit it." This feeling undoubtedly accounts for much of the enthusiasm with which many Englishmen in India throw themselves into the movement.

BENGAL.

(Dec. 4.)

MR. JUSTICE ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER will resign his seat in the Calcutta High Court at Christmas, owing to ill health.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL COLLETT, who has just returned from England, will consult with the Bengal authorities regarding the precautionary measures necessary on the Cachar frontier against the Lushais before taking up his command in Assam.

MR. WALTON, Chief Engineer, Oudh and Rohilkhund Rail way, has been specially deputed to Bengal to inquire into the report on the origin of the late accident to the piers of the Jyntee Bridge, East Indian Railway. It will be remembered that the failure of these piers nearly led to an ugly disaster to the mail train from Calcutta.

BUXAR wheat did not, according to the Englishman, succeed very well in Bengal during the past season; but the experiments do not seem to have been very conclusive. In some places the sowing was too late, while in Burdwan the floods interfered with the experiment. Still, in Maldah and Howrah the grain produced was of good quality, being better than local grain. Evidently Buxar wheat requires careful attention, but it certainly deserves another season's trial.

MAHOMMEDAN education in Bengal has been a matter of special care during the past year. Two assistant inspectors were placed on special duty to devise means for the improvement of the various classes of Mahommedan schools. The inspectors were Mahommedans, and they are to report on the special educational wants of their co-religionists and to endeavour to induce influential Mahommedans to introduce into their schools useful secular subjects, such as arithmetic and the local vernaculars. Part of their duty is also to inquire into the distribution of the Mohsim Fund, and it is hoped that they may be able to make such suggestions for its allotments as may make it more serviceable to the cause of education than it is at present.

MADRAS.

(Dec. 4.)

THE Government of India have inquired of the Madras Government to what extent the recent failure of the rains in the southern parts of that Presidency have affected the crop prospects.

MR. REES having been relieved from his duties as Private Secretary to the Governor of Madras by Mr Stuart, joins the Prince's party as Madras attendant, relieving Mr. Claude Vincent, who proceeds to Calcutta to take up his new appointment.

LORD CONNEMARA has written to Mr. A. J. Higginbotham offering to reappoint himas Sheriff of Madras next year. His Excellency says that though he does not approve in principle of the practice which has been prevalent for some years in Madras of reappointing gentlemen who have held the shrievalty for one year, yet he feels Mr. Higginbotham has so worthily filled the office that it would be a disadvantage to the public to lose the benefit of his services.

H. E. the Governor will spend Christmas vacation on tour partly in connection with the East Coast Railway project.

OBJECTION is being raised to H. E. the Governor touring during Christmas holidays, as it will interfere with the holidays of officials at stations to be visited.

THE Gazette announces that Government has been requested to submit to the Government of India names of three qualified candidates for appointment to the Statutory Civil Service in this presidency. Government will base its recommendations on the results of the competitive examination, which is restricted to twenty-five candidates.

M.P., Sir J. S. Maxwell, Lord Radstock, and Colonel Shortland, commanding the Royal Artillery, Colaba.

AMONGST the passengers who left for Europe by Friday's Overland Mail steamer were the Hon. M. L. St. Clair, Executive Engineer in charge of the Nepal Water Works, the Rev. Sir James Phillips, Bart., and Mr. Cairnes Daniell, Senior Member of the Board of Revenue at Allahabad.

MR. G. A. BARNETT, the Agent of the G. I. P. Railway, proceeded by Friday's mail steamer to England on urgent private affairs. He will be away for three months, during which period Mr. Henry Conder, the General Traffic Manager, will perform his duties.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL BUDGEN, commanding the Bombay District, met with a severe accident on Wednesday at Bandora, which might easily have cost him his life. He had gone out early to observe some manœuvres of the 4th Bombay Rifles, who are engaged in a miniature Camp of Exercise at Bandora, and when witnessing "the attack" from a small rugged knoll covered with jutting crag and loose boulders, his horse, which was quite new to military exercises, got bewildered. swerved, and bolted pell-mell, throwing the general heavily on his head and knees. His helmet and puggree, which luckily kept firm, saved the head from the violence of the impact, and he thus very narrowly escaped being killed. His knees, however, were badly injured, and so far as is at present known there is what doctors call a compound fracture of the right knee pan, which it is feared may disable him for several weeks to come. He is, however, otherwise in excellent health and spirits.

CONSEQUENT on his appointment as Puisne Judge of the High Court the Hon. K. T. Telang, M.A., LL.B., C.I.E., barrister-at-law, has resigned his seat as additional member of the Council of his Excellency the Governor for making laws and regulations. H.E. Lord Reay, in accepting Mr. Telang's resignation, has expressed his thanks for the services rendered by the honourable member during his term of office.

THE many friends of Major Afsur Jung will, says the Deccan Times, be glad to hear that this popular Hyderabad officer has been again singled out, as we learn that the Major's services have been placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief of India. Nawab Asfur Jung leaves this about the first week of January to join the staff of Sir Frederick Roberts as Honorary A.D.C. to his Excellency during the approaching camp of exercise at Imirdicke.

BOMBAY will soon boast of an Agricultural Farming Company, to be formed upon the same principle as similar institutions of the kind in Europe which have been so successfully worked. The management will be entirely European, and the agriculturist will live on the spot and personally superintend the farm. The chief object of the company will be to acquire certain lands at Loni, which it is intended to cultivate and farm by growing vegetables, fruit, sugarcane, cereals, &c., to be sold in the Bombay market, and also to deal in cattle, poultry, eggs, milk, butter, &c., and generally to attend to such matters as may be conducive to the success of the company.

AT Bombay on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 30, in the presence of a numerous assembly, Sir Charles Sargent unveiled the fine bust of the late Sir Frank Souter by Mr. Roscoe Mullins, which has been placed by the European and native members of the police force in front of the new police headquarters at Byculla. The likeness is striking, and does great credit to the intuition and skill of the artist, who had to work from photographs. On the pedestal is inscribed a simple and touching tribute to the memory of the popular Commissioner of Police, who for twenty-four years controlled the police force of Bombay, and gave security and confidence to its large and diverse population. Sir Charles Sargent in a speech full of feeling re-called the many fine qualities of the late Commissioner, who owed to his own courage, force of character, and self-reliance the fact that, without adventitious aid, he was with general approval entrusted with, at the age of thirty, the responsible and arduous duties of chief of the police of this great city. Sir Frank Souter was already distinguished for energy, dash, and high courage, when, in 1864, he received this mark of confidence and recognition of valuable services. He had, in the opinion of so good a judge as Sir Hugh Rose, earned the Victoria Cross, and the strong recommendation of the tough old soldier would have obtained for the gallant police officer the coveted distinction, but that by technical rules the Cross can only be given to those acting under military orders, and young Souter, when he defeated and slew a dangerous outlaw, was acting independently at the head of the armed force which he led so well. Next to obtaining the Victoria Cross is the honour of having deserved it.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

(Dec. 3.)

THE Maharana of Dholepore has met with rather a bad accident by a fall from his horse. Medical assistance has been summoned from Agra to Dholepore.

THE Lieutenant-Governor, the Chief Justice, and a large number of civilians and friends gathered at the North-West Provinces Club, Allahabad, on the 25th ult., to bid farewell to Mr. Cairnes Daniell, Senior Member of the Board of Revenue, on the eve of his departure for England.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN TUFNELL, who met with an accident recently on parade, is well enough now to attend office.

BRIGADE-SURGEON HOWARD, P.M.O., with the Chin Field Force, has had to return to Rangoon from the front under the medical charge of Surgeon J. J. Moran. It is not said what ails Dr. Howard.

IN a long-range shooting match lately Colour-Sergeant McDonald (A Company, 2nd P.V.R.) made the wonderful score of ten consecutive bull's-eyes at 900 yards with a Martini-Henry regulation rifle.

ON the morning of the 21st ultimo the old colours of the 28th Bombay Pioneers were placed in St. Mary's Church, Poona, and secured over the tablet of the late Colonel Singleton, C.B., who served from ensign to colonel in the regiment, and lost his life in the Soudan campaign.

THE story of the mutiny in the 4th Madras Pioneers has been brought to a close with the Commander-in-Chief's confirmation of the sentences passed by the court-martial. As will be seen from the telegrams, these are very rightly not of a kind that will encourage other ringleaders to come forward.

THE Poona District Revolver Club, the formation of which is mainly due to two officers having been recently shot by a Pathan at Chaman, is now established. Upwards of 138 officers, 12 warrant officers and staff sergeants, and 125 Native officers have joined it. The first competition in connection with it will come off between the 10th and 25th inst.

THE Lahore paper says that two cadet regiments of boys between the ages of eight and ten have been raised in Kabul. The boys are of mixed nationality—Afghan, Kabuli, Kohistani, Kazilbashi and Tajaki. When they reach the age of fourteen they are to be employed as the bodyguard of the Governor of Kabul. They attend school, and are drilled and disciplined by experienced officers. Every Friday they parade before the Governor, and are then dismissed for a holiday. The boys get four, five or six rupees per mensem.

A CORRESPONDENT writing from Camp Pur says:—"We are living here in an arid plain where nothing in either the vegetable or animal word—with the exception of white-ants—will remain unless thereto compelled by the Government of India. Our water-supply is a dirty canal which glides along on its oily way close to the camp. Some days ago a dead Hindu floated by with a peaceful smile on his face, happily unconscious of the dismay which his presence caused among the teetotal brigade. Since then blue ribbons 'have fallen.' No demand for them in the market. On the other hand 'alcohols is up' and rising rapidly."

THE Military Account Offices of the Western Circle will be moved to Rawalpindi on or about the 20th March. Local habitation will not even then be ready for the establishment, but they will be temporarily lodged in buildings which have been set apart for them until the new offices are finished. It is expected that a number of the Bengali employés will not proceed with the offices. Some changes in the personnel of the Department will be made before the move takes place, and the officers of the Department are anxiously awaiting the issue of the new graded list of reorganisation, which for some reason or other has been very considably delayed.

IT has been decided that an officer of less than three years and more than seven years' service is ineligible for employment on the Commissariat Transport Staff. During the first period of a probationer's service, which is fixed at five years, he will remain seconded in his regiment, after which he will be permanently transferred to the department, or will revert to regimental duty at his own request or on the recommendation of the head of the department. An officer of a Native regiment appointed to the Commissariat Transport Staff on probation is entitled to the pay of his regimental appointment up to and for the date preceding that on which he joins the Commissariat Office to which posted, and to departmental staff pay from date of joining.

The Civil and Military Gazette states that it is not impossible that a little discovery which has been made might cause the Muridki camp to be put off altogether. Preparatory to the encampment of large bodies of mounted troops there, operations in well sinking for the purpose of securing an adequate water-supply have been in progress. These have been rewarded with success of a sort: for water has been reached. Unfortunately, however, it has been found to be quite unfit for human consumption, and not good enough even for animals. Of course it is possible that the wells, on going deeper, may yield water of purer quality, and other wells sunk in the neighbourhood might produce better results. The neighbourhood is not an unhealthy one: so that portable water of a certain standard of purity may exist. But the first result of the search is not encouraging."

THE RUNNING AMUCK AT DEESA.

DEESA, NOVEMBER 27.

On the morning of the 26th instant, as the ressaldar-major was going to parade, he met a sowar in the Lines in undress with his carbine, and on asking him why he was not properly dressed and on parade, the man fired at him, the bullet entering a little above the hip and coming out above the groin. The ressaldar-major fell to the ground, but did not cry out, and no one seems to have noticed the occurrence. Shortly after the wordie-major came by, and noticing the sowar in undress asked him the reason, when the man also fired at him, the bullet passing through his left hand. On this the wordie-major ran for the shelter of an adjoining building, when the sowar fired again, this time the bullet passing through one of the wordie-major's lungs. There were at this time two European officers in the Lines, but no report was made to them. A Native officer, however, galloped up to Colonel Heyland's house, and informed him of what had occurred. Colonel Heyland, taking a revolver, rode down to the Lines. He there ordered a native officer and six sowars to accompany him, and went in search of the would-be murderer. As soon as he saw him he gave the order to the party who accompanied him not to advance; at the same time he galloped at the man, who fired at him but missed his aim. Colonel Heyland, as he came up to the man, fired his revolver in his face, but also missed, and his horse carried him some yards beyond before he could pull him up. In the meanwhile, the sowar had run and sought shelter behind one of the mud walls in the Lines, and as Colonel Heyland was looking about to see where he was hiding, he fired at him a second time, the bullet striking Colonel Heyland in the left side. The sowar then surrendered himself. A dooly was procured, and Colonel Heyland, who was suffering intense pain, was removed in it to his own house. Surgeon-Major Foss and Surgeon Thomson there made an examination, and came to the conclusion that the bullet had glanced round the ribs and come out at the back, and that the case was not a serious one. The pain of which Colonel Heyland complained succumbed to medical treatment, and all seemed to be going well, till midnight, when Colonel Heyland again experienced intense pain in the region of the stomach, and at a little after three o'clock on the morning of the 26th he passed away, the immediate cause of death being peritonitis. The ressaldar-major died the same morning, but the wordie-major is progressing favourably, though it is probable his hand will have to be amputated. The sad event has caused a terrible gloom in the station, and great sympathy is felt for Mrs. Heyland. Colonel Heyland was a gallant soldier, a good cavalry officer, a keen sportsman, a true friend, and a universal favourite, and his death will long be regretted by all who knew him. It seems that the sowar, who is a Mahratta, had a grudge against the ressaldar-major, who had, he said, been the cause of his getting extra drill unjustly. The man had prepared the ammunition he used some days previously. The cartridges were snider pattern, and he had cut off the tops of the bullets to allow of the cartridge fitting into the Martini-Henry carbine. He stated that he intended to shoot the ressaldar-major, but that he had no grudge against his commanding officer, and would not have shot him had he not first charged and fired at him.

MR. MACDONNELL, Home Secretary, takes eight months' leave from April next.

THE Controllership of Postal Accounts now under the Director-General of Post Office will be placed under a Controller-General from the 1st of January.

MAJOR C. E. YATE on his return from furlough proceeds to Muscat as Political Agent, Colonel Mockler, the permanent incumbent, having obtained an extension of leave in England.

THE Gilchrist trustees have decided to withdraw the scholarship hitherto awarded by them to youths in India and Ceylon on results of the London matriculation, and to substitute for it two scholarships of £200 each, tenable for three years, for the study of science in Europe. One of these is allotted every year to the universities of Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras, in rotation; the other every third year to the universities of the Punjab and the North-West Provinces jointly.

THE SLEEPING CAR COMPANY AGAIN.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—As we are given to understand that it is perfectly useless to make any representations to the International Sleeping Car Company, we trust you will kindly allow us the use of your columns for placing the following facts before the Anglo-Indian travelling public.

We left London on the night of the 29th November with the weekly Indian mails. We had booked seats in the Pullman Car from Calais to Brindisi, and some of us had paid for them seven weeks in advance in order to secure certain definite accommodation. On arrival at Calais, however, we were curtly informed that a Pullman Car not being available, a waggon lit had been substituted, and we were allotted fresh berths.

The Company had, moreover, booked two more passengers than the car could accommodate, and consequently those gentlemen (who had paid full fare for berths) had to sleep on the floor of the passage, and their bedding and luggage had to be stowed away in the lavatories and passages. The discomfort to all resulting from this overcrowding can be easily realised by anyone acquainted with the necessarily limited accommodation on board a Mann's car. As each of us had paid £1 9s. 3d. extra fare for special comfort in a forty-five hours' journey we were certainly entitled to the full accommodation implied in the contract, and this we did not get.

The attendants on board the car were attentive and obliging, but they were, of course, powerless to prevent overcrowding, which was due solely to the Company booking passengers for whom there were not berths.

The Indian travelling public should, therefore, fully realise the fact that when a passenger pays for a seat in a Pullman car there is no guarantee that he will have the clear use of the lavatories and passages.

Overcrowding a sleeping car seems to us to be most inexcusable cupidity, or stupidity, on the part of the Company.—We are, yours faithfully,—

INVESTMENTS IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—It is high time that someone should draw the attention of the investing public to the above subject, and I am glad to see that you are doing so. It may be said that as most of the readers of ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL are already investors in Indian securities, either voluntarily or otherwise, you will be preaching to the converted. The question is how to get at the wider circle of investors—that crowd of Mr. Giffen's clients who are constantly pressing forward to swell the Income-tax returns? No doubt you have this in view, and trust to the facts and figures you will cite getting to their deaf ears through your own better-informed readers.

With regard to the guaranteed railways and the sterling Indian stocks, there is little or no difficulty. As those securities rank in the usual list prescribed to trustees they are sufficiently well known to solicitors and legatees.

It is, I presume, in reference to the silver securities that you are about to put out your strength—the enforced rupee Government paper, the Presidency banks, and joint-stock company shares. Give a dog a bad name—you know the rest; and so it is with the much-abused rupee. The bare mention of that coin and the securities expressed in it cause the British investor to shy and turn tail. You will have to treat him as a resolute horse-breaker does with a jibbing and obstinate colt—lead him up to the object and make him face it again and again until familiarity induces, not contempt (which he now foolishly cherishes), but liking. As you have shown already this week, in general terms more forcible than polite, the difficulty lies in the foolishness of the creature. The one thing that the British investor dislikes is—bother. He cannot, or will not, take the little trouble of converting Indian currency into sterling. You will have to humour this foible by telling him that there are plenty of brokers or East Indian merchants who will do this for him. Probably you will then cite examples (stocks which yield from 5 to 10 or even 12 per cent.) either on the market price or the original issue par value.

But after you shall have done this for the British investor, his foolishness will not depart from him. He will forthwith exclaim—"But there's that exchange, how can I tell what return I shall get laid down here?" Again you will refer him to the calculating broker or banker; and you may possibly condescend to his low arithmetical state by reminding him—(a) that in sending out his sterling for investment to India he will at once have a big gain by exchange; and (b) that the loss by exchange on stocks that pay from 6 to 10 per cent. in India will only diminish the return by one-fourth or so, thereby leaving the investor much better off than he would by his "safe" investment here, or open choice of those "wild cat" securities to which you refer, ranging from China to Peru—anywhere except in British territories—which are so freely offered in the swarming prospectuses or share lists of the day.

After all, though you desire to lead the British investor and his wife into paths of Indian plenty and good returns is very laudable, I doubt whether your success will be as great as the effort deserves. From my own recent experience the prospects of trying to do people good, in spite of themselves, is not encouraging. Only a few weeks ago, just as the silvertide was turning, I took some pains to set out the facts and inducements in favour of Indian investments in a communication addressed to one of the best of investors' advisers. Week by week he performs this duty with evident care, and to the level best of his British lights; but, somehow, though he suggests investments from Egypt to Mexico, from American rails to China Government Stocks—silver countries all—he always shuns Indian rupee stocks and shares. Though my memorandum was adapted to open up what to his clients would be an extremely new and wider field, under British authority and security, he has not venturned to press on my counsel, even for what it might be worth, to his friends, who are continuously craving for more than the four and five per cent. that he offers them. Trusting your efforts may be more successful in penetrating the hide of the British capitalist, I am, yours, &c.,

SILVER DUTIES AND HALL MARKING.

"To The Right Honourable George Joachim Goschen, M.P., Her Majesty's Chancellor of the Exchequer.

"Sir,—In view of the flourishing condition of the British Exchequer the Council of the East India Association ventures to again urge on your attention the desirability of abolishing the silver duties and of reforming the laws relating to Hall Marking. After the repeated memorials presented to the Chancellors of the Exchequer, your predecessor and to yourself, since 1882, and the very full statement of the Earl of Northbrook on the twenty-sixth of July of this year, the Council does not consider it necessary to justify its petition at any length, and contents itself by calling attention to the answer of the Secretary of State for India made on the twenty-sixth of July of this year, that 'he was quite sure the Chancellor of the Exchequer was perfectly willing to remove the duty when he found himself able to do so, and that he trusted that next year the Chancellor of the Exchequer would feel himself in a position to grant this much-needed relief.'—I have the honour to be, Sir, Your most obedient servant,

"ORFEUR CAVENAGH, Chairman,
"For the Council of the East India Association."

THE CRY OF THE UNCOVENANTED.

In the course of his interesting and suggestive speech Mr. King set forth very clearly the principle upon which the Government is asked to listen to the claim of the European members of the Uncovenanted Service—the principle that having determined that Europeans should be employed for State reasons in what has been well designated the scientific branches of the service, they are entitled when on leave, and when pensioned, to be treated on an equal footing with members of the Civil and Military Services. That was the original understanding when the contract was made. The scale of pension was more limited, but it was intended that in both cases the pensions should be paid at the rate of ten rupees to the pound—the rupee being then at par. By chance the pension was specified in the one case in pounds, and in the other in rupees. When the fall in exchange placed the Uncovenanted Civilians at a great disadvantage, the Cooper's Hill Engineers were in the same boat, and to them as well as to the others the Government answered that there was no claim for redress, that rupees were specified in the contract, and, whatever their value, should be accepted in full payment of all demands at the current rate of exchange. But when the equities of the case were pressed home upon the authorities they yielded the point in the case of the engineers, and their right to receive an equivalent in rupees to the pound sterling was conceded. This concession was expressly grounded on the fact that it was present in the minds of both parties at the time that it was entered into that the rupee would continue at par. That expectation having been falsified by the result, it was admitted that in fairness the loss ought not to be borne by the party which was least able to bear it, and that the original understanding should be carried out by which the pension earned should be paid. It was self-evident that a pension reduced by one-third would not be adequate to keep the recipient in reasonable comfort after his thirty years' service to the State in a trying climate. What the Uncovenanted Service asks for is that this principle shall be accepted in the case of men employed in the Public Works Department, in Education, in the Telegraph, Forests, Finance, Survey, Police, Post Office, and minor departments. It is asked that they shall be treated in the same equitable spirit as that shown—after a good deal of pressure—to the Cooper's Hill engineers who entered the service in certain unlucky years. What answer has been made to that claim? None which deals even remotely with the merits of the question. A manifest disposition to evade the real issue has been abundantly displayed; the claim has never been met in full front. Therefore it is of the first importance to obtain a Committee to inquire into the facts, and see how far the claim is based on equity. Mr. King is hopeful that in the next Session the Committee for which he will move will be obtained. That will not be victory, but it will be a step towards it. Once the true state of the case comes to be understood in the House of Commons, the India Office will have no motive for opposing the vis inertiæ to a body of public servants who are sure to get a further hearing.

RAILWAY TRAVELLING IN BURMA.

We have heard a lot lately about the discomforts of travelling by the Madras railways, but we fancy the following account which a contemporary gives of railway travelling in Burma may prove consolatory to those who like to think that they are no worse off than some of their fellows:—

The grievances of travellers by rail on the Burma State lines are beginning to be complained about. It is to be hoped the manager of the lines will find a remedy. At present the one mail train which runs between this and Mandalay travels the distance in twenty-six and a-half hours at a rate of speed below fifteen miles an hour! Almost the whole distance the line is straight, and the speed might easily be increased to twenty-five miles an hour without any extra danger or increased cost. Indeed, as a great many more people would travel if the journey was accomplished in less time, the traffic would pay even better than it does now. If the line was in private hands we may be certain that there would be at least two through trains each way in the twenty-four hours. This would, perhaps, means some increased work to the officials, but would certainly bring increased receipts to the railway. The arrangement for refreshments along the line are bitterly complained about, and if the railway authorities exercised a little more supervision over the refreshment rooms the public would be better pleased. But the railway swells have carriages to themselves, and as they can cook and eat in them, the bad quality of refreshments obtained at the rooms does not trouble their minds. Then, again, thefts on the line are constantly occurring and detection is rare. The third-class passengers are treated more like animals than human beings, and yet they are the most paying constituents the railway has. By the exercise of a little ingenuity it would be possible to utilise the upper space of third-class carriages like that of the first and second-class, and thus poor people would get more space to stretch their legs and get a little more sleep than is possible at present. Our State Railway officials sadly require to be wakened up to a sense of the duty they owe to the travelling public, and if they found their own incomes and prospects suffer from their present supineness and neglect, it would, perhaps, be beneficial both for travellers and taxpayers.

IN connection with the changes in the East Indian Railway it is announced that Mr. Strachan, Chief Locomotive Superintendent, who has served on the line for thirty years, retires, and will be succeeded by Mr. Rendell.

INSPECTOR MOORE, Pegu Police, has been found guilty of selling caps to a police-sergeant to make up the deficiency in the latter's stock. He was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200.

Want of space obliges us to hold back several reviews and book notices until next issue.

INDIAN INVESTMENTS.

II.—ENGLISH FEARS AND PREJUDICES.

THERE are several causes which have interfered in the way of Indian Investments finding favour with English investors at home, who are so willing to place their confidence and their money in the most "wild-cat" schemes in other parts of the world. In the first place, nobody takes the trouble of "pushing" Indian enterprises—that is to say, placing facts and advantages connected with them before the British public. One would think that Anglo-Indian commercial men who, although they may have retired from active business pursuits in the East, yet continue to hold monetary interests therein, would do something in England to further an object which they must surely have at heart. But, as a fact, they do little or nothing of the kind. They complain bitterly enough of their losses as shareholders in Indian tea and other companies, which they declare only want an influx of British capital to ensure profit and prosperity; but they are content to grumble and bear their losses. The country of India, its climate, its government, and its currency, are one and all subjects for abuse and discontent; but no practical remedies are suggested for the evils complained of, the grumblers simply contenting themselves with grumbling, and accepting the position of affairs with all the fatalism of Mahommedans. It is Kismet. This indifference to their own interests must be a matter of observation to others, who naturally argue that if Anglo Indians will do nothing themselves to push in London the industries and investments of India, of which they speak so highly, why should strangers to that country trouble themselves in the matter? Indifference leads to apathy, and apathy to distrust. Those who will not help themselves, the proverb tells us, will not be helped by the gods. But the proverb might have gone further, and added with truth that the gods will not only refuse help to such, but will rather help them to ruin. The Ceylon planters have at length awakened to this possibility, and are now combining together to get the attention of the investing British public drawn more closely to the prospects which commercial enterprises in their beautiful and wealth-containing island hold. And they will reap the reward of their energy, not only in Great Britain, but in America and Australia. But Anglo-Indians at home and in India seem to be doing nothing but formulating complaints. If it be true, as stated in the telegram from the Times' correspondent at Calcutta, which we publish to-day, that the crude legislation of the Bengal Council is hampering trade and industry in that city, and discouraging the employing of English capital there, mere local protests, even when forwarded to the Supreme Government for submission to the Secretary of State for India, will have little weight unless there be some commercial organisation amongst Anglo-Indian business men at home, so as to ensure that the complaints shall have a fair hearing here. Honourable Members who pretend to take an interest in India confine themselves to questions connected with the policy of British rule there—questions which they will not study, or cannot comprehend in all their breadth and variety; but India's trading and commercial interests are altogether neglected by her "friends" in Parliament. Here, then, at the very outset of the series of articles we propose to write, we are met with this stupendous difficulty—viz., the extraordinary apathy shown by Anglo-Indians themselves to the subject which we have taken in hand—a subject vitally affecting so many of their own interests With the example of these Gallios before them it need not be wondered at that Indian investments are neglected in England, and that all manner of excuses are made for shunning them. One of these, which we have heard more than once mentioned, is the instability of our rule in India itself, it being feared that one day we may have to relax our hold, and let India "perish." To those who really hold this view there is one short and simple answer, and that is that the day when England allows this to happen, that day she rings her own death knell. It is therefore somewhat out of place for Englishmen to commence "discounting" the British Empire. The "state of exchange," the "fall in silver," the "depreciated rupee"—these are, of course, phrase-forming excuses which can be glibly uttered without the utterer understanding much about them. But we opine that there are men with practical knowledge wedded to no "currency fads" who can show how even this terrible bug-bear—the Indian exchange question—can be made to work for the profit of the English investor in Indian enterprises, as well as for the benefit of India itself. In a future paper we may attempt this not very difficult feat.

A further trouble which meets us is that not of apathy or ignorance, but of wilful isrepresentation. When a

Digitized by Google

London "financial" paper tells its readers, as one did a few days ago, that there is no mineral wealth in the Deccan—no profitable indigo planting in India, and no "gems" in Ceylon except those which come from Birmingham—what is to be said? Shall a similar reply be given as that given of old to the doubter of any good thing in Nazareth—"Come and see"? Or shall we imitate the candid courtesy of Junius in one of his celebrated letters, and say to the "financial" calumniator—"Sir, I shall not call you a liar, but with all the politeness possible I shall proceed to prove you one!"

Perhaps the latter will be the more satisfactory arrangement for our purpose.

AMONGST THE PINES.—A HINT FOR ANGLO-INDIAN INVALIDS.

AT this inclement season of the year, when, in addition to the usual colds, chills, and chest complaints which so often come in with an English Christmas, we are threatened also with a Russian invasion in the shape of an Influenza epidemic, Anglo-Indians, whose bronchial tubes and other interior chest pharphernalia may be none of the strongest, may be hesitating whether or not they should rush away to some continental resort to avoid the threatening dangers here. Before making up their minds to do so it might be well for such anxious people to ask themselves whether health and comfort could not be as well secured by remaining in England. A writer in a sensible little periodical which we lately came across says, with the regard to the love of Englishmen for foreign wintering places:—"A person who journeys to Continental health resorts ought to take health with him instead of searching for it when there. The fatigue of the journey, the predilection or otherwise for continental life, the bustle of a crowded hotel, the absence of homely seclusion, the difficulty of obtaining a sick dietary, the separation from friends, the frequent want of good house or neighbouring sanitation, the changes of temperature to which even the most favoured spots are liable, and the expense, are all matters to be taken into consideration." All this is true, and the position is put to the invalid in a very thorough and practical way. But when the writer recommends that it would be better to seek relief from winter ills in England itself, he does not suggest a place to go to where each case will obtain, as he says it should do, "attentive consideration, not only as regards the ailment, but also as respects habits, ideas, idiosyncrasy, temperament, constitution, and means." Well, we can tell him of such a place, and that, too, almost at our doors. Let the weak-chested one—or anyone suffering from or threatened with any of the dreaded ailments which an English winter is supposed to bring with it—go to the "Farnborough Pine Therapeutic Establishment," and try the treatment there. This establishment celebrated its second anniversary a little time ago, when the proprietors, the Messrs. Nethersole, entertained a number of medical friends and visitors at a very interesting banquet, where, in addition to "all the delicacies of the season," good wines, short speeches, and a most hospitable welcome, the guests were initiated into the secret of how and where cure and comfort—when suffering from the troubles of an English winter—can be obtained without having to go to the Riviera or elsewhere. The able and courteous resident physician, Dr. Vaudrey, explained the various treatments—the pine, Russian, vapour, &c.; and several patients who looked in the ruddiest of health testified gratefully to the success of the treatment in their individual cases. The various baths were visited, and were models of cleanliness and careful arrangement. The pine district of Farnborough has always been celebrated for its healing properties in the matter of chest complaints and bronchial affections, and the proprietors of the Therapeutic Establishment have wisely improved the situation. This is no advertisement, but an honest recommendation of a place which well deserves the patronage of those for whom we chiefly write—our Anglo-Indian friends.

INDIAN MIDLAND RAILWAY.

The eighth ordinary half-yearly meeting of the proprietors of this company was held on Friday, at the City Terminus Hotel, under the presidency of Mr. T. R. Watt.—The report having been taken as read, the Chairman, in moving its adoption, said it was with satisfaction that he was able to refer to the fact that their railway was now a completed system. They had in existence, as part of the entire system, 679 miles of line, which number of miles was included under the original contract with the Government, and was inclusive also of the Sindhia Railway, which was taken over. In addition to that they worked, under an agreement with the Government, the Bhopal Railway, and that gave them to work and control 726 miles of railway. The Midland line, as constructed by the company, was of first-class quality. The figures of the accounts showed an expenditure to the 30th of June of £5,662,490, which gave an outlay £8,330 per mile. But at that date expenditure was being still incurred on the work opened, and there was also expenditure to be incurred in the workshops and offices of the Jhansi branch, as well as for plant, and it was probable before the completion of the expenditure their total outlay would reach about six and a half millions. In that case the cost would stand at about £10,000 a mile. As far as he could see, at the present time, that would include the money requisite for working the railway and the provision of stock, &c. They were to be congratulated further upon the fact that the cost of the line had been considerably less than it would have been had prices for materials been as high as they were at present. In this way they had saved about half a million. The mileage worked during the half-year was 469 miles, the actual distance opened on the 30th June being 679¼ miles. As far as they had looked into the matter the results, as far as receipts were concerned, were calculated to encourage the hope that the anticipations of the promoters would be realised. The motion was seconded by Mr. Blake, and carried without discussion.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The eightieth half-yearly general meeting of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company was held on Friday, in the Cannon-street Hotel, Mr. T. R. WATT, Chairman of the company, presiding.

The CHAIRMAN, in affixing the seal of the company to the register of proprietors, said that the number of proprietors on the register was 14,602; and in moving the adoption of the report, he said that at the time of the last half-yearly meeting in June it was apparent there would be a considerable falling off in the receipts of the half-year which was now under consideration. As a fact the receipts were £207,427 lower than they were for the corresponding half-year. This was not satisfactory in itself; yet there was nothing in the condition to occasion any anxiety. On the contrary, he would be able to show that the half-year had in reality been a favourable half-year. If they looked at the coaching receipts they would find there had been an increase on the total results of £1,959 17s. 4d. There had been a decrease under two heads—the conveyance of troops and police; there had also been a decrease in the conveyance of military luggage and baggage, but, on the other hand, there had been a very large and important increase in the number of passengers carried. The number carried was 300,000 in excess of the number carried in the corresponding period of the preceding year, and the total number of passengers carried was the largest ever carried in any half-year. The receipts for passengers carried were 2·69 pies per passenger per mile, which was the lowest they as yet had, and it was slightly less than last year. The explanation was that the company had carried more passengers, but for a shorter distance. Then going to the goods receipts, the net decrease in the amount was £201,084, but for purposes of comparison he would exclude railway materials and the wheat traffic. It was mentioned in the report that cotton had yielded a considerable increase, of £128,000; there was also an increase in seeds and a large number of other items, and the result was that the goods traffic for the half-year was £180,820 in excess of what it was in the corresponding period. With respect to wheat, it had occupied quite an abnormal position during this last half-year. The quantity carried by the company was the smallest quantity they had carried since 1881, and the condition of the wheat trade had not affected the G eat Indian Peninsula Company alone, but the circumstances affecting it had prevailed all over India. During the six months to 30th June, 1888, the exports of wheat from India fell to 374,676 tons, and in the same half-year for 1889 they were 317,085 tons. In 1888 the export from Bombay was equal to 75·5 per cent. of the whole quantity exported, while in 1889 it was 55.5 per cent. In Calcutta the numbers were 19·3 against 13·4 per cent.; but in Kurrachee the percentage went the other way, the numbers being 5·2 per cent. against 31·1 per cent. The explanation is, that throughout the country the Great India Peninsula Railway traverses the crops were inferior; yet in the district of Delhi there was a very large quantity of grain to be obtained, and that grain was brought down and exported from Kurrachee. The condition of the wheat crop for the season on which they were now entering was very much more favourable than it was in the past. Referring to the expenditure, everything had been done to keep it down, and it was not much out of the way.

Mr. Wollaston Blake seconded the motion, which was unanimously carried.—A dividend at the rate of 17s. 6d. per cent. was declared, in addition to the guaranteed interest of the half-year; after which the proceedings terminated.

THE BURMA MEDALS.

Notice was give in Friday's Gazette that the Indian medals with "Burma 1885-87" clasp, awarded to the Naval Brigades engaged with the troops in the operations in Burma between the 14th of November, 1885, and the 30th of April, 1887, are now ready for distribution. Application should be made personally or by letter to the Accountant-General of the Navy, Admiralty. Petty officers, seamen, and marines, whether applying in person or by letter, are required to produce their certificates of service.

GOVERNMENT LITIGATION IN BENGAL.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

There was a very considerable decrease in the civil litigation in which the Bengal Government was concerned last year as compared with the two years preceding it. The number of cases to which the Government was a party in 1886 was 1,051, and 685 in 1887; while in 1888 the number was only 550, or nearly fifty per cent. less than in 1886. The explanation of the decrease given by Mr. T. T. A. Allen, the Legal Remembrancer, who has drawn up the report, would seem to be that since 1886 cases under the Land Acquisition Act have fallen off, not that the Government has been less involved in litigation. The litigation in connection with Wards' estates is a separate matter, and here, too, we find a considerable decrease in 1888 as compared with 1886; for while in the latter year the number of cases litigated was 1,435, in the former it was but 971. One case is mentioned as to the issue of which we shall be somewhat curious. The Government Pleader joined other pleaders of the Midnapore bar in lending Rs. 20,000 to the Rani Anandmoyi Debi, the adoptive mother of the minor of the Basudepore estate, taking as security a mortgage on her property, and exacting 18 per cent. interest at compound interest, with half-yearly rests. The loan was not paid up, and the plaintiffs now sue for Rs. 58,652 with compound interest. The defence is that the terms are extortionate, but it failed in the Lower Court, where a full decree was given. An appeal is now before the High Court, and meantime we may wonder whether the High Court will agree with the Lower Court or not. The Legal Remembrancer, by the way, does not seem very successful in realising his decrees. In 1888 the sum under realisation for Wards' decrees was nearly fourteen lakhs, but of this little more than 2½ lakhs were recovered. Interest on the amount outstanding will soon mount up to a tidy sum. From one estate nearly Rs. 80,000 were legally due, but only Rs. 174 were recovered.

MR. F. ROBERTSON, at present Engineer-in-Chief of the Sind-Pishin Railway, and builder of the Sukker Bridge, has accepted the appointment of Engineer-in-Chief of the East Indian Railway. Mr. Robertson takes up his post immediately.

SEVERAL of the Russian papers keep an extremely watchful eye on our Indian military affairs, and their knowledge of our fortifications, defensive measures, and mobilisation scheme is, to say the least of it, rather surprising. In a recent issue of the Rousskii Invalid, that journal gives us the following copious information concerning our defences, &c.:—"The works of Quetta are so far advanced that the bastions south-west of the Indus may now be considered impregnable to attack. The lines of defence round Rorat are also nearly complete, and only the heavier cannon have to be mounted. At Bombay two-thirds of the fortifications originally planned have been finished; while at Rangoon a new fort has been built. The plans for the defence of Calcutta have been very carefully studied and reconsidered. Amongst other projected works, a site has been chosen and marked out for the construction of a new battery at Hooghly Point, on the left bank of the river, where it has its confluent with the Roupnarayan, 100 kilomètres below the city, where the batteries will in time be furnished with several 38-ton guns of 9-in. and 6-in calibre, quick-firing cannons, and machine-guns. All, or nearly all, the submarine defences round the Indian coasts are completed, and at the ports of Kurrachee, Bombay, Calcutta, and Rangoon all preparations have been made to arm these submarine mines with the least possible delay, while torpedo-boats and small vessels for harbour and coast protection are now on their passage from England to India. In short, the plan of mobilisation in case of war is said to be a fait accompli. The bridges of the Attock and Sukkur have all been fortified with têtes de pont; and other works, in order to increase the defensive position of Rawul Pindee and the great railway skirting the Khodga-Amran, are actively progressing. It is also stated that it is proposed to disburse two millions of rupees in the purchase of pack and baggage animals, reserve provisions, stores, and forage; and, to avoid a sudden outlay in war time, the gradual purchase of 5,000 mules has been sanctioned, as the animals can be utilised in peace time for transport purposes."

WITH reference to the incident which added so much to the liveliness and interest of the banquet in the Town Hall given on Tuesday week to Mr. Seymour King, M.P., the Honourable Mr. Justice Parsons has addressed a communication to the Committee of the members of the Uncovenanted Service. Mr. Parsons states that he regrets any unpleasantness should have occurred, but that when he went there as a guest he was not aware that anything in the nature of a political meeting was intended, or that there would be any attack on the policy of the Government. He desired to make it clear that he was present in the capacity of a guest only, and had no wish to join in a demonstration against the Government, of which he was a servant. The Committee have replied acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Justice Parsons' communication, but intimating that his view of what took place is erroneous. On the other hand several prominent members of the Civil Service, who were present on the occasion, have written to the committee expressing their pain and regret that the incident referred to should have occurred, and assuring the committee that they did not in any way associate themselves with or accept any responsibility for the regrettable episode. This may be taken, says the Bombay Gazette, as fairly representing the view of the matter by all who were present when Mr. King made his rattling and effective speech, which in no respect went beyond the limits of fair criticism of a public pronouncement in the House of Commons by an Under-Secretary of Government. If ever it shall be the fate of Mr. Justice Parsons to occupy a seat in Parliament, he will soon learn to bear with equanimity adverse opinions of Government and its measures. A bath of life in the free air of England is a splendid tonic, and hardens the fibre of the inner and the cuticle of the outer man wonderfully in a very short time.

LIGHT versus DARKNESS.

"SHAKESPEARE, the Greatest Genius who has ever yet lived," taught the Divineness of Forgiveness, of Perpetual Mercy, of Constant Patience, of Endless Peace, of Perpetual Gentleness. If you can show me one who knew things better than this man, show him!! I know him not!! If he had appeared as a Divine, they would have Burned him; as a Politician, they would have Beheaded him; but God made him a Player.

"He taught that kindness is nobler than Revenge!!"—The Rev. GEORGE DAWSON, M.A.

"Earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice,
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The Deeds of Mercy."—Shakespeare.

What higher aim can man attain, than conquest over human pain?

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

"A DEVONSHIRE LADY.—Jan. 25, 1889."

The Secret of Success.—Sterling Honesty of Purpose. Without it Life is a Sham!—"A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of abominable imitations are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that, employed in an original channel, could not fail to secure reputation and profit."—ADAMS.

"I used my 'FRUIT SALT' freely in my last severe attack of Fever, and I have every reason to say I believe it saved my life."—J. C. ENO.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see that the Capsule is marked ENO'S "FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS. PREPARED ONLY AT

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" WORKS, POMEROY STREET, NEW CROSS ROAD, LONDON, S.E. (BY J. ENO'S PATENT.)

NATURE RULES ALL THINGS.

In every form of weakness use Scalded Milk.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." They can be used for any length of time without fear or harm."

THE BROAD ARROW AND NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armie, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

COORG SAUCE.

The Universal Appetiser,

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

This delicious Sauce is prepared from the receipt of a Nobleman, whose perfect knowledge of the culinary art has obtained for him the nom de plume of the "Modern Lucullus."

The name of this celebrated Sauce—

THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER—

Has been given to it because, in addition to its remarkable flavouring qualities, it possesses the singular property of

CREATING OR RESTORING THE APPETITE,

In fact, it practically realises the French saying—"L'appétit vient en mangeant."

Since the introduction of THE UNIVERSAL APPETISER it has been said, both in Society and at the Clubs, how rarely is the mauvais quart d'heure noticed, every one being so much interested in discussing and enquiring about the new Sauce—

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it . . . . there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, une 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1889.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 13th Dec.; from Allahabad and Madras to the 11th Dec.; and from Calcutta to the 11th Dec.

THE Leprosy Bill is not likely to be brought up for some time, as the authorities consulted have not all replied.

THE scheme for the administrative reorganisation in the N.W.P. and Oudh as submitted by the Local Government is now under consideration by the Government of India. The orders of the Secretary of State will be required before the proposed changes can be carried out.

FROM the revised itinerary of Prince Albert Victor his Royal Highness will reach Benares on the 14th Jan. There he will be received by Sir Auckland Colvin, and will be his guest for the next ten days at Benares, Lucknow and Agra, leaving the last-named station on the 24th. His Royal Highness has spent the greater portion of the past week shooting in Travancore.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS, in the course of his winter tour, visited Agra last week and opened the "Stewart Tannery," projected by Pundit Mohun Krishna Dar, and named after Colonel Stewart, who superintended for a number of years the Government harness factory at Cawnpore.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT will perhaps shortly pay a visit to Lahore. Nothing, however, has yet been settled.

THE RIGHT HON. Mr. H. C. CHILDERS, M.P., has consented to speak at the meeting of the Bombay branch of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, which is to be held in the Town Hall on Dec. 11. Lord Reay will preside on the occasion.

MR. ROBERT STEEL has declined reappointment to the Legislative Council, as he is obliged to leave for England in February. The vacant seat will be offered to Sir Alexander Wilson, President of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

IT is understood that the vacancy in the Calcutta High Court, caused by Mr. Justice Mitter's retirement, will, if possible, be filled by the appointment of a Mahomedan Judge. The three selections which are being publicly canvassed are Mr. Justice Mahmood, of the North-West High Court, Mr. Amir Ali, an ex-Magistrate of Calcutta, once member of the Bengal Council, and now a barrister of the Calcutta Court, and Mr. Mahomed Yusuf, a pleader of that court.

IT is reported that an attempt upon the life of Sir Asman Jah was made at Hyderabad recently. No particulars have transpired, except that the would be assassin is in custody, and that the whole matter is being investigated. It is added that the affair is discredited in official circles, and that the man who made it is a lunatic.

SIR EDWARD BUCK, Secretary to the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department, will probably make a tour in the Bombay Presidency and Southern India towards the end of the current month. He proceeds home on furlough in March next.

SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN leaves Quetta about the 19th of December for a tour in the Zhob country.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL MACLEAN has left Teheran to resume the duties of the Mashad Agency.

MR. E. J. SINKINSON, Financial Secretary, will probably takes six weeks' leave in India shortly, Mr. Finlay acting for him.

MR. A. E. C. CASEY is permitted to resign the Bengal Civil Service.

ON the return from leave of Mr. W. Young, Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, an Additional Judicial Commissionership will be again created, and Mr. J. Dyson, who has been officiating as Judicial Commissioner, will be appointed to the post.

MR. BROOKE, Deputy Director-General of Telegraph, succeeds Colonel Mallock in the Director-Generalship.

MR. G. HYNES, Postmaster-General of Burma, is about to take six months' furlough, when Mr. W. J. Ham, Assistant Director-General, officiates for him.

NEWS has just been received in Kashmir of Captain Younghusband's safe arrival at Gilgit after a most difficult and adventurous journey.

MR. NEY ELIAS, after settling the boundary of Eastern Karenni, returns northward, working across the Shan plateau to Khranlung.

MR. LYALL, Commissioner of Chittagong, is now in Calcutta conferring with the authorities regarding the Lushai Expedition. Good progress appears to be making with the arrangements for concentrating the troops at Lungleh, and the season is now healthy.

IT is probable that after all a column will be sent into the Northern Lushai country from the Cachar side; but Mr. Quinton's opinion is waited for before the question is decided.

ONE of the questions connected with Upper Burma which are likely to come up for disposal very shortly is the future organisation of the military police battalions. As hinted some months ago, local regiments may possibly be formed out of the material available as the force is reduced.

IT is intended to spend fifty lakhs annually for the next three years on railway extensions in Upper Burma.

THERE is a likelihood of the Sikkim-Tibet question being finally disposed of within the next few weeks. A basis of agreement between England and China seems possible once more, now that the Pekin Government have been placed in full possession of the facts concerning Tibetan intrigue and aggression in Sikkim.

MR. PYNE, Engineer to the Amir of Kabul, has arrived in Peshawar on three months' leave.

THE Comptrollership of Postal Accounts, which, as announced some days back, comes under the Comptroller-General from the 1st January, has been given to Mr. Sandell, Chief Superintendent of the Financial Department. It is the enormous growth of the monetary transactions of the Post Office that has caused the supervision of its accounts to be entrusted to a trained officer of the Finance Department.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR has been continuing his tour in the Southern Presidency, and has had some excellent sport.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS leaves Madras for Rangoon on the 16th Dec.

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR will be the guest of the Nepal Government during his shooting trip in the Terai, the Durbar making all arrangements, both for sport and supply.

LORD REAY started, Dec. 4, on his last tour in Guzerat and Kattywar.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT is now on a tour of inspection in Gujerat and Kattywar.

THE MAHARAJAH OF ULWAR is dangerously ill, suffering from pneumonia. Three doctors are in attendance.

NOTES.

THE telegrams from India are chiefly taken up with the "doings" of the fifth National Indian Congress, which commenced its sittings at Bombay on Thursday last, under the presidency of Sir William Wedderburn and the patronage of Mr. Bradlaugh. Mr. Henniker-Heaton, M.P., and many European ladies and gentlemen attended also as guests, and, according to Reuter, "a new feature was the presence of a few lady delegates, elected by the Ladies' Association." This association is still under the shade of obscurity, and we are not informed whether any Native ladies are members of it. If so female education in India is progressing, but not quite in the direction in which its best advocates intended.

THE "doings" of the meeting have been confined to what our Trans-Atlantic friends call "orating." Sir William Wedderburn led the way by of course complimenting the body of delegates which had complimented him by electing him as their President, and he told them some things which were true but not new, and some which were new, but not true. He told them that British rule was now accepted as the national government by India and her people. This was true, but it was not new. British rule has not been accepted now, but for many years, as the national government by the people of India; it is only now that its justice and wisdom is being called into question by "irresponsible chatterers" of the kind presided over by himself. It was new, but not true, to say that the "acceptance" of British rule was the result of "Lord Ripon's just and sympathetic administration," but it is quite true and not new to say that mischievous Babaodom agitation was the result of that nobleman's foolish utterances when Viceroy of India.

IT was also true to say that the trade of Great Britain with India was small compared to her trade with Australia; but it was not true to say that the smallness of the trade with India was "owing to the poverty of the Indian ryot." If Sir William Wedderburn thinks that the delegates over whom he is presiding are particularly anxious about the welfare of the Indian ryot, he does not know his men. The Indian ryot is not of the class which can find funds to send "spouters" to Congress or to keep up a paid Parliamentary agitation establishment in London. His condition may be sad and sorrowful, but the tender mercies of the Congress delegates are not for him, unless —by making use of him as an object to attract English sympathy—delegate ends can be gained also.

BUT Sir William Wedderburn, not content with speechifying at the Congress meeting, has also contributed an article embodying similar views to the Pall Mall Gazette. The Indian National Congress, he tells the readers of that chaste and ever truthful journal, is "a great assembly drawn from all the provinces of India, making known to the people of England the grievances and needs and aspirations of the Indian people." This assertion is certainly not new—it has been the cry of the Congress-Wallahs themselves since they raised their standard of revolt against British administration in India—but it is assuredly not true. Who delegated the delegates?

THE Globe knows and tells the truth, which its Radical evening contemporary perverts or ignores. Here are facts and correct comments upon them :—

"Quite seasonably, the great Indian pantomime in which Baboos figure as patriots began on Boxing Day. The performance appears to have been given with all the old properties—Delegates—how elected and whom representing no man can say. But the real work of the Congress does not usually take place at the Assembly itself. The talk there is comparatively moderate, being mainly distinguished by irrepressible verbosity. Very different is the tone of the pamphlets and fly-sheets which, whether or not issued with the official sanction of the Congress, invariably appear simultaneously, and are distributed by the hundred thousand far and near. Their purpose is unquestionably to fill the Native mind with a sense of profound discontent by representing the British rule as tyrannical, unjust, and hateful altogether. As for the alleged representative character of the Congress, it would just as much represent the inhabitants of Saturn or Jupiter as those of Hindostan. The so-called 'public meetings,' at which the delegates are supposed to be elected, are hole-and-corner affairs of the true caucus type. All is cut and dried beforehand; the wire-pullers nominate those who seem most likely to render unquestioning obedience to their decrees, and election follows as a matter of course. It may be doubted whether one per cent. of the population attend these shams; the vast majority of the rural population have never even heard of their inestimable privilege of returning a representative to the 'National Council.' National it is not in any sense of the term."

AND "national" it never can be, as the same writer points out, until all the nations of India are blended into one. But when that happens—if it ever does—"it will not be the subtle Bengali, or the 'benighted' Madrassi, or the keen trader of Bombay who will take the lead." Certainly not; the Mahommedans of Northern India, the Punjabis, the Sikhs—in fact the "strong" men on whom England will have to depend upon on the day when danger threatens her Empire in India—will have something to say as regards "representation"—if this absurd coquetting with present self-appointed Congress Delegates of Lower India goes on and shows the Government of England to be weak and yielding. Other demands will be formulated of wider scope than any questions of extension of Legislative Councils, and then dangers will arise—not the least of which may be—a contest between the Moslem and the Hindu for the privilege of "representing" India. The carrying out of the policy of "divide et impera" so often recommended, will then be a difficult one for England.

AS it is, there are signs of mischief brewing. On the day following the first meeting of the Congress at Bombay, Reuter tells us that a meeting of Mahommedans was held in the same city under the presidency of the Kazi, the chief religious officer of their community, when a Resolution was passed declaring that the Mahommedans, as a community, were opposed to the Indian National Congress.

It is evident that the Mussulmans do not intend to allow the "mild Hindoos" to have it all their own way in telling the people of England how the people of India wish to be represented and ruled.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Madras Mail from Cuddalore that recruiting for French Colonial Army has been introduced in French India. Every family, residing in the French territory and enjoying right of voting, will on and from the 1st prox. be required to send a member for enlistment in the Colonial Army. Such recruits will be taken to some other Colony, say, Saigon, and be drilled there in the art of war. After three years' service they will be sent home and form a reserve, who will be called out in case of war. Thus in course of some years Pondicherry will be the home of several thousand soldiers.

THE OLDEST BARRISTER IN INDIA.—A contemporary writes:—We regret to have to record the death of Mr. George Garrow Taylor, the oldest Barrister-at-Law in India. Mr. Taylor was one of the most prominent and successful advocates in Bombay, and at one time held the post of Master-in-Equity of the High Court of Bombay. Mr. Taylor was very much advanced in years, and consequently suffered from general debility and other concomitant diseases consequent upon such a state of things. He was removed to Secunderabad from Chadarkhat where he had been living, in view to secure better medical attendance, and notwithstanding all that medical science and skill could do has been done, Mr. Taylor succumbed and passed away quietly. We believe he has left his widow and a family of grown-up members quite unprovided for. On the death of Mr. James Taylor in 1878 Mr. George Taylor was appointed Sheriff of Bombay. He was called to the bar in 1839.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, DEC. 29.

The latest news from the Lushai expeditionary force reports that Hawsata's brothers have tendered their submission at Fort Lungleh. General Tregear has demanded the immediate surrender of the captives and loot and all the heads of British subjects which they took during the last raid. The final reply of the chiefs is expected shortly. These chiefs are Dohola and Vantura; both were concerned in Lieutenant Stewart's death. They profess willingness to give every assistance in clearing the jungle along the line of march. The route of the northern column is being explored by the frontier police under Mr. Daly. Much sickness prevails among the transport coolies at Lungleh, 120 out of 1,000 being on the sick list. The rain has stopped, but the road is very heavy for transport. The elephants have proved useless. The neighbouring chiefs continue to maintain friendly relations, and send in daily to the camp large supplies of vegetables.

The Calcutta season, which during the short time it lasts would probably compete on favourable terms with most of the leading capitals of Europe, is now in full swing. The past week has little to record, save public events almost entirely of a social character. Each separate day has been consecrated to Christmas holiday-making in excelsis, and, with the sole exception of the faint note of jangling discordance which has managed to penetrate, though with difficulty, even through the deadening atmosphere of profound public indifference, my record would be confined exclusively to races, balls, dinners, cricked matches, polo tournaments, and various other Christmas festivities too varied and numerous even to catalogue. The whole community, European and Native, has been en fête, and, despite all attempts to mar it by outside agitation, a universal spirit of good feeling and good fellowship has reigned supreme. On Thursday the Viceroy and his guests, including the Dowager Marchioness of Waterford and Lady Claud Hamilton, attended the races, driving up the course in Viceregal State. The principal event was the race for the Viceroy's Cup. The party were also present at the cricket match between the English Eleven and the Calcutta Cricket Club. This created a great amount of public interest, and finally ended in an easy victory for the English Eleven, the respective scores being—Calcutta, first innings, 249; second, 90; the English Eleven, first innings, 311; second, 29 for the loss of one wicket. The English Eleven play Bengal to-morrow.

The proprietor of a Native paper published at Lahore has been convicted of libelling the Rajah of Faridkote, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or be imprisoned for three months. A few more successful prosecutions of this character, and the insufferable persecution to which Natives of position and means are frequently subjected by vernacular papers would very speedily collapse, once it were clearly evidenced that systematised libel was unremunerative, and that the present system had ceased to exist.

A Native Judge was slippered at the railway station at Bangalore yesterday by another Native whom he had previously convicted. The man was sentenced by the Deputy Commissioner to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

The Hindoo Congress, that Cave of Adullam for Government pensioners, unsuccessful pleaders, and impecunious graduates, opened its session at Bombay on Thursday. The whole proceedings, in spite of Mr. Bradlaugh's presence, have fallen flat, and, save locally, have attracted little or no public attention or interest. Though a few individual Parsees and Mahomedans attended both these influential communities have declared against the Congress. A convincing proof of the extraneous and factitious character of the movement lies in the fact that this year, as on the two former occasions, the principal wirepullers have been forced to whip up a languid, simulated zeal by capturing a European faddist equipped with political principles of so very plastic a character that they offer no bar to acting as president of a collection of agitators whose avowed object it is to preach the doctrine of political discontent, and to foment widespread agitation against the established policy of the British Government in India. Both the general secretary and the president are ex-Government officials, drawing from the Indian Government yearly pensions of £1,000. They are both faddists of a very pronounced type. The secretary at one time devoted all his energies to collecting Indian birds; he then became a rigid vegetarian, and subsequently for a time passed as a zealous disciple of the fantastic philosophy of Neo-Buddhism. Ultimately, having exhausted the restricted notoriety and small satisfaction to be derived from these various hobbies, he rose up in revolt upon his past life, and donned the mantle and adopted the rôle of the apostle of the new dispensation of Indian Socialism.

The president is essentially a man of half knowledge. He is possessed of a very ordinary range of intellect, but is constantly spurred into paradise by unlimited aspirations and imperfect conceptions. As he owed his most important promotion to Lord Reay, it is believed that one of the main reasons for his acting as president is the sympathy which is supposed to exist between them on this and other subjects. He delivered his inaugural speech on Thursday. There is little or nothing in it worthy of telegraphic record. He eulogised Lord Ripon as the greatest of Viceroys. This must have made even his audience smile, if they possessed the faintest sense of humour. He then proceeded to attack the existing system of administration, both military and civil. The chief counts in his indictment seemed to be that the army was spirited and well equipped, and, therefore, desired to be employed on active service, and that his own Civil servants were not anxious to have their salaries reduced. He did not explain why he never himself had volunteered to forego his own salary, nor did he even now offer to surrender any portion of his £1,000 pension. He wound up by pointing out that the India Office, all members of Parliament possessing Indian experience, and the London Press were generally opposed to the Congress movement.

On Friday the members discussed Mr. Bradlaugh's proposed Bill for the expansion of the Legislative Council. Yesterday they passed various 'ad captandum resolutions in reference to the extension of the permament settlement throughout the whole of India, with the patent object of inducing the land-holding classes to join in the agitation, Native volunteering, military colleges, the reduction of the salt tax, income-tax relief, change of the House of Commons' rules relating to Indian debate, and repeal of the English duty on silver plate. All these resolutions were thrown in as make-weight and passed without any discussion. In the evening Mr. Bradlaugh was presented with addresses. In reply he said he was proud of the title of the member for India. He approved the Congress.

A sanitary board has been appointed for Bengal.

At the last primary scholarship examination in Bengal eight out of twenty scholarships were awarded to girls.

BURMA.

RANGOON, DEC. 28.

Prince Albert Victor reached Mandalay on the 24th, proceeding by rail to Tounghoo, and thence by the recently constructed railway line to Mandalay. On his arrival he was received by a deputation consisting largely of English and Burmese officials, who presented him with an address of welcome. They said such tranquillity prevailed in Burma as had not been known in the happiest days of the rule of Mindonemin, Thebaw's father. They added that the fact that the Prince had been able to reach Mandalay by rail was a clear sign of the conspicuous success which had attended the efforts for the pacification of the province. A prominent member of the deputation was Kinwoonmingyee, late Prime Minister of Thebaw. The Prince proceeded to Government House. His movements were watched with great interest by a vast crowd of Burmans. The usual sports and boat races took place. His Royal Highness left Mandalay yesterday morning in the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's steamer Beeloo. He arrives at Thayetmyo this evening, and leaves to-morrow for Rangoon.

From the Chin field force it is reported that much fever already prevails amongst the troops, and a great number of the Punjabee coolies have been disabled by sickness. The roads are giving much trouble, and it has been found necessary to seek a new route, the water being insufficient on the route already selected. A detachment under Major Gordon Cumming, of the Cheshire Regiment, has destroyed three Chin villages without resistance. Major Raikes, the political officer with the force, has been invalided home to England. He was strongly opposed to invading the Tishon territory.

The Siam Boundary Commission have met Sawlawi, the chief of the Red Karens, at Lwekaw. They proceed with him to Sawlon.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS IN INDIA.

BOMBAY, DEC. 26.

The fifth National Indian Congress assembled here to-day amid much enthusiasm, in a fine hall especially constructed for the occasion. Two thousand delegates were present, and some three thousand visitors. A new feature was the presence of a few lady delegates, elected by the Ladies' Associations. Mr. Bradlaugh, Mr. Henniker-Heaton, M.P., and many European ladies and gentlemen also attended the meeting as guests. Mr. Bradlaugh was received with prolonged cheering.

Sir William Wedderburn, who was elected President by a unanimous vote, said, on taking the chair, that he was proud to take part in a movement which was well calculated to promote the best interests of India and England. He had watched the movement from the beginning, and regarded it as the natural healthy fruit of education and free institutions. Lord Ripon's just and sympathetic administration had fulfilled the popular aspirations. Hence British rule was now accepted as the national government of India and her people. The chief defect was the want of Parliamentary control over Indian affairs. The Act of 1858 had diminished that control and taken away the opportunity for periodical inquiry into grievances. The Conservatives should join in establishing an impartial control in England and restoring periodical Parliamentary inquiry. The Indian trade with Great Britain was small owing to the poverty of the Indian ryot. The exports from England to Australia were eighteen pounds a head, but to India eighteenpence a head. Sir William Wedderburn appealed to the British commercial class to help to make the Indian people more prosperous. Trade would then advance by leaps and bounds.

In conclusion the President declared that the Indian Council required reconstruction, and added that the future success of the Congress was assured.

BOMBAY, DEC. 27.

At a meeting of Mohammedans held in this city under the presidency of the Kazi, the chief religious officer of the Mussulman community, a resolution was passed declaring that the Mohammedans as a community were opposed to the Indian National Congress.

The Native Indian Congress reassembled at one o'clock today. A committee was engaged up to that hour in considering the question of reconstructing the Imperial and local legislative councils, the President having suggested that a scheme be prepared upon the lines of which a Bill should be drawn up to be introduced in the House of Commons.

At the opening of the sitting Sir William Wedderburn explained that Mr. Bradlaugh desired to know the matured views of the delegates to the Congress upon the reconstruction scheme, and therefore they would discuss the draft suggestions prepared by the Committee. Mr. Eardley Norton moved, and the Hon. Pandit Ajudhya Nath seconded, a series of resolutions suggesting the formation of a special electorate of twelve for every million of the population, to select representatives on the Imperial Council at the rate of one for every five million inhabitants, and on the Provincial Councils at a similar rate, the minorities to be proportionately represented. Such elected members would form half the total number of the members of the Council, the remainder being half ex-officio and half nominated. The electoral qualifications will be settled later. After a full discussion all the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. Bradlaugh was asked to draft a Bill on the lines indicated.

BOMBAY, Dec. 29.

The Indian National Congress held its third and last sitting yesterday, when various important resolutions were passed. Mr. Hume, the secretary of the Congress, affirmed the resolutions of previous Congresses, and notified that the resolution in reference to the Arms Act had been passed, placing all persons on the same level. A resolution was also passed heartily thanking Lord Reay for his administration as Governor of Bombay. The action of the London Agency and Committee of the Congress was confirmed, and the thanks of the Congress were voted to them. A deputation of four Anglo-Indians and six Native gentlemen was nominated, and empowered to press the views of the Congress upon the public in England. Two Mahomedan delegates, who objected to the proportion of representation on the Imperial Council, agreed to be the Congress, and announced that they must further consider the matter, and consult their co-religionists. They thought that the views of the majority must be right. Owing to the enormous dimensions of the present gathering, the number of delegates to future Congresses was limited to five per million of the population, giving a maximum of about 1,000 members. It was decided that the meeting of the Congress in 1890 should be held in the Bengal Presidency. On passing to the consideration of the financial resolution a sum of Rs.63,000 was subscribed on the spot. The Congress was then dissolved amid enthusiastic cheers for the Queen-Empress.

In the evening Mr. Bradlaugh attended a reception, at which some 6,000 persons were present, including the members of the Congress. Numerous addresses from all parts of India, many of them enclosed in handsome caskets of Native work, were presented to him, and the proceedings were marked by great enthusiasm. Mr. Bradlaugh expressed strong sympathy with the objects of the Congress, declaring that he was satisfied that the movement was loyal, constitutional, and moderate. He promised to introduce in the House of Commons the desired Bill for Council reform, and to use every endeavour to press it through Parliament.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

PROVINCIAL SHOWS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Each year the Government of India apportions a large sum of money from the Imperial grant for prizes to be awarded at the numerous Horse Fairs. This sum is further supplemented by grants from Provincial revenues and local assignments. The Imperial grant this year amounts to Rs. 20,000 for the Punjab and Upper India. The sum is considerable: but, when we find that it has to be distributed over twenty-one shows, it may well occur to one to ask what advantage the present system possesses and what benefits it commands? For example, what good is there in having separate shows at Lahore, Mooltan, Amritsar, Rawalpindi, Gujerat, Jhang, &c.? All these places are grouped within a closely connected area. The sums given as prizes at each of these shows are necessarily too small to effectively serve the end they are intended to. We should very much like to hear the opinions of competent officers, both military and civil, on the subject of Provincial Horse Shows, or rather Agricultural Shows. We should imagine these would do far more good than the present isolated shows where local exhibitors get prizes for the best of very poor stock, and receive the poor incentive of very insignificant prizes. If a large sum of money was distributed in prizes at a Provincial Show, the various exhibitors would profit by learning what standard they should compete to. Prizes should be given through a gradation of half-a-dozen degrees of merit, so that many could benefit. District officers should be empowered to grant passes by railway to the seat of the show to exhibitors whose stock was worth bringing, and thus deserving men would not be deterred from attending on account of the expense. At such shows it would be possible to learn what advance is being made in the improvement of the breeds of horses, donkeys, mules, cattle, camels, &c. The breeders of one part of the country would be able to see whether they were more successful or otherwise than the breeders from other parts and would be stimulated to better efforts. The present shows are faulty from another cause—exhibitors at Jhang now go to Rawalpindi, thence to Amritsar, Lahore, &c.—whereas a Provincial show would save all this. We certainly would urge on Government the consideration of substituting one big show each cold weather in place of the several little ones held through several months.

THE KASHMIR ARMY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We have noted that a Kashmir contingent will not be present at the Muridki camp; and indeed, as time goos on, it appears almost doubtful to us whether the Kashmir forces will, even in two or three years' time, boast a body of two thousand men, adequately disciplined to be brigaded with British troops. If the two thousand men could be taken away to the middle of a desert, and there resolutely drilled and instructed, apart from degenerating influences, it would be another matter; but the Kashmir army includes, say, twenty-five thousand men, and while two thousand odd are expected to conform to rigid discipline, the remaining twenty-three thousand are at their backs in all the license of—we might almost say—ragamuffinism. The material of the troops is fine enough, but this is not enough. The material of the whole country, in men, money, and resource, is also fine enough; but mismanagement has reduced country and army alike to the lowest level of apparent worthlessness, and an extra rupee of pay, and the casual forty-eight hour visit of a British inspecting officer, will not evolve two thousand disciplined soldiers out of the army, any more than a rise in pay to the members of the old administration and occasional ceremonial visits from the British Resident could have reformed the State. The latter has been more or less thoroughly taken in hand, but until the administration of the whole Kashmir army, its finances, discipline, equipment, dress, pay, and even daily food are placed under some sort of control and management, we shall be sanguine if we hope, several years hence, to see a body of Kashmir troops, 2,500 strong, creditably manœuvring on a parade ground with British troops. The time when we might expect to see them, with equal credit, making an example of the invader at Khyber or Kandahar, would belong to another century than ours.

SAPPHIRE SYNDICATES.

(Ceylon Observer.)

The rush that was made some months ago in London fo shares in the Burma Ruby Mines Company, seems to have led to similar undertakings in Ceylon in connection with gemming operations for sapphires and cat's-eyes in that island. As it is more than probable that the syndicates forming in Colombo and elsewhere may eventuate in the establishing of gemming operations on a large and systematic scale, and as it is equally probable that whatever experience some of those concerned may have in prospecting and working gem lands, few, if any, amongst them may possess practical acquaintance with the capabilities and movements of the precious stone markets of Europe, a few words of caution may not be out of place at the present time.

To find and prepare valuable sapphires for market may not be very difficult, especially when the work is carried on by capitalists, but it is quite another affair to place those gems on the market judiciously and advantageously. When the greater navigator, Vasco de Gama, after one of his successful voyages to the east, showed a gem of great size and beauty to a Venetian jeweller, the latter was lost in admiration of the precious stone, and valued it at some fabulous price. But when the delighted owner took the jeweller to his house, and showed him a chest full of similar gems, the countenance of the latter immediately fell, and he declared that it would be difficult to sell them at any price!

The moral of this story should be taken to heart by the members of the budding Sapphire Syndicates, who may rest assured that their financial success will depend far more upon a careful study of the requirements of the precious stone market, and a determination to keep the market carefully fed, than by any abnormal output of precious stones, which without the exercise of discretion in realising may prove a source of actual loss. We ask them to consider what it is which commands such a high price for the Pigeon-blood Ruby when perfect in colour and quality, exceeding the diamond three or four times in price. It is its very great rarity. For every thousand rubies brought to the market only one is really of this quality. For a syndicate to propose to turn out a large yearly quantity of rubies based on the present prices would be absurd.

A few years ago an experience of this kind was gained in regard to sapphires. Excessive quantities had been sent to London from Cashmere and elsewhere, as well as from Ceylon: in a short time sapphires became a drug on the market. In the auction rooms hundreds of parcels brought no bid, and though a large portion of these were inferior, even the few fine stones were terribly depressed in value. Later on a similar over-supply of diamonds from the Cape produced great depression in the price of that stone, but by a wise decision on the part of the gem miners to limit the output, a better demand soon arose, and the market shortly recovered its tone. No market is so easily and so seriously affected by excessive supply as that for precious stones. The ultimate purchasers are so limited that the least excess in supply affects the price. If in one week a hundred carats of sapphires realised £3 a carat, a following parcel of a like extent and quality would not realize more than £1 10s., and so on with continued supplies.

We may mention in illustration the case of the Ceylon moonstone, now so popular. In former times this gem was sold by the carat. It was so rarely seen that many jewellers had no knowledge of it, and it was only in some collections that a specimen could be found. After the Colonial and Indian Exhibition it became very popular. Royalty patronised it, and being in demand enormous quantities came to England. The excessive supply brought down prices, until inferior lots were sold at so many for a penny.

There will always be an ebb and flow in the market for such articles. Fashion has most to do with it, and a gem being cheap and popular the sale will be large. But we would ask, how will syndicates be able to pay dividends when the very element of success, a large supply of the product, involves a serious fall in price without encouraging the demand.

There was recently a rumour of an order for a ton weight of moonstones having been sent to Ceylon. Should this be the case the markets in Europe and America will be demoralised, though it may possibly be intended to "corner" the gem, as wheat and other products are so manipulated, but it is undesirable to have precious stones delivered as they do our Wallsends.

Many years ago it was quite a regular thing to take into the market a parcel of stones and make a fair profit on the cost of the same in Ceylon; but of late years the case has been quite reversed—prices are often paid in Ceylon that are never realised in London or Paris. No doubt one reason is this: many mines in other countries are supplying European houses. Take, for instance, the new mines of Australia. Millions of carats are sent to Europe of mixed stones, consisting of rubies, spinels, garnets, &c. It is true the so-called rubies, at least, many of them, are not real corundum, but they have great brilliancy, are certainly much superior to the common garnet, and as these stones are all cut in the most approved "brilliant" fashion, they have a much better appearance than the Ceylon spinel, and are one-tenth the price. I have seen some very superior stones, fit for any jewellery, from 2s. 6d. to 10s. each, but the excessive supply ruins them. Even at those prices little sale is commanded.

One of the marked features of the more recent mines, in addition to the plentiful supply of precious stones, is the many very large specimens. Before the Cape was discovered as a diamond-producing country, it was very rare to see a diamond over 50 carats, but the frequent finds of stones two or three times that size has considerably affected the once profitable big gem. There have been large diamonds of great size, but indifferent in colour, finding great difficulty in realising £4 a carat, where once its size would have commanded ten times the amount. The same applies to cat's-eyes—several valuable and large cat's-eyes, formerly costing £7 to £10 a carat, in Ceylon—hard cash—are now being forwarded from one country to another at £4 and £5 a carat, half their original cost, and yet do not sell after five or six years of waiting. All this goes to prove that the demand for gems is very limited, the least excess of any kind overflows the market, and down drops the value one-half. If we take into consideration the very few who have means to purchase a gem of £1,000, and then further consider that out of those who can afford to buy such expensive gems there must be at least one-half who, having means, have not the taste to expend their money in that way, it would be readily understood how very limited is the demand and how quickly it can be over supplied.

THE NEW INDIAN ARMY LIST.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

A good deal has been written lately regarding the conversion of the Bengal Army List into the "Indian Army" List. Much has been said in its praise, and much in depreciation of the Lists of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies. To our mind, however, the new List is still an incomplete one, and is not quite what its title professes it to be. It has been said, we will admit on a reasonable presumption, that no one will buy a copy of the Local Lists when all the information required regarding the three armies may be found under one cover. But this very reasonable presumption is based upon an erroneous idea that the new List is complete. We have had occasion to test the truth of this, requiring some ordinary information regarding personnel the of one of the local armies, which, though not of a variable nature, was not to be found in the new List, and we had to fall back on the local List. This circumstance induced us to compare the three Lists, and there we missed a good deal of information concerning the local armies that was not to be discovered in the "Indian Army" List, but which is in its place in the local Lists. One of these local Lists is as good a publication of its kind as we have seen. We refer to the Bombay Army List. The List is published monthly, corrected up to the last day of the month, and may be bought at Bombay very often on the 4th of the following month, though it does not reach out-stations till about the 5th or 6th. We believe that the work is done privately—being printed and published by the Bombay Education Society's Press, Byculla, and compiled, by permission of Government, by a portion of the clerical establishment of the Adjutant-General, Poona—out of office hours—these compilers receiving a small remuneration from the Press for their trouble. The expenses of the publication are on a very low scale—so low, indeed, that it could hardly be expected that so correct and complete a List could be turned out for the money. It is a lesson, at any rate, to the Government of India, which spends thousands of rupees monthly over the Bengal Army List, or rather the "Indian Army" List as it is now called, and which probably costs still more. The Madras List, being a quarterly publication, is of course not so correct as the Bombay one, but it is perhaps as accurate as the other. No quarterly List can be generally correct for the ordinary purpose of finding out where an officer is, or even where regiments are in the relief season. The War Office long ago recognised this, and has, accordingly, its two Army Lists—one quarterly, and the other monthly. The War Office Quarterly List is, perhaps, as good as we have a right to expect, with the exception of its index which is faulty, but it cannot possibly be kept up to date, especially with regard to the movements of officers. Hence an abbreviated monthly List is a necessity. Of course, even monthly Lists cannot be absolutely correct, but they are much more correct than quarterly lists, and sufficient for ordinary purposes. If both a quarterly and a monthly List are necessary at Home, we think that they are also necessary in India. In no part of the British Empire are officers moved about so frequently—not to say unnecessarily—as they are in this country. A quarterly Indian Army List cannot, therefore, escape becoming very incorrect before it has lasted half its term of existence. Taking this into consideration, and also the difficulty there must always be found in any attempt at compiling at Simla information up to date monthly regarding the three presidencies, we think the best plan would be to have a Quarterly List for all India, and a monthly List for each presidency—or, when the four army corps system is introduced, a monthly List for each Army Corps. The Indian Quarterly List should contain information of a standing nature only, especially with regard to birth, war services, staff services, precedence or gradation Lists, and dates of all commissions and appointments. The monthly Lists could then confine themselves to the stations of officers, their movements, leave, special duties, temporary appointments, and other information of a variable nature. This is the plan adopted at Home, or nearly so, and we recommend its introduction in India. That it is a good one, is clearly demonstrated in India at the present time, for in Bengal and Madras we have two quarterly Lists—the information in which regarding officers' movements, is seldom correct after they are a month old; and in Bombay we have a List, which being corrected and published monthly, necessarily contains more certain information under all the heads which may be classed as variable. The monthly Lists need not be large ones, and if they are drawn up on the lines which govern the publication of the Home List, we are sure that the result will be satisfactory.

THE U.C.S. AGITATION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The incident at the dinner to Mr. King at Bombay may, perhaps, lead to a direct solution of the doubts which have been in the air ever since the U.C.S. agitation took its present shape. These doubts have reference to the share which it is permissible for Goverment servants, whether "Uncovenanted" or not, to take in a combined agitation to protest against the way in which Government treats its Uncovenanted servants. When the agitation first commenced on its present lines we expressed a desire that this point might be cleared up; because at the time the prevalent doubts resulted in half-measures, sometimes of doubtful ingenuousness. Circulars, for instance, although marked "private" or "confidential," were sent to us for public comment and publication. Prominent members of the Uncovenanted Service who had hunted with the hounds so far as to attend quasi-public meetings and pass resolutions, endeavoured to run with the hare also, by writing to ask us that their names might not be published in connection therewith. Our entire sympathy with the Uncovenanted Service movement caused us to express regret that any doubt should exist with regard to its legality; but we pointed out that the inaction of the Government at the time, if continued after the agitation had entered upon this more active phase, might be accepted as a tacit admission that Government rules were not infringed thereby. Government has not stirred since; so we may conclude that the agitation is regarded by the authorities as permissible and legal.

As, however, the wave advances, its highwater mark touches new boundary-lines, at each of which the Government may be inclined to make a stand. One of these may be said to have been garrisoned, suo motu, by Mr. Justice Parsons at Bombay, at the dinner which was given to Mr. King there. But, so far as the expressions of opinion by those present, and especially by Mr. Parsons' colleagues, may be taken as a guide, his resistance to the advancing wave was rather of the character which children who man sand-castles on Brighton beach offer to the incoming tide. He threw his spadeful of sand, and retired—hastily. Although, however, his retreat was almost ridiculous, and although the expression to which he objected, as reported by telegraph, appears little else than a commonplace of political argument in such controversies, it is possible that Mr. Parsons was representing a principle which is worth upholding, and that Mr. King's speech may be taken as an example of the thin end of the wedge, which ought to be excluded at all hazards, lest the whole width of an attitude of uncompromising hostility to Government be forced upon Government servants. Mr. King did not say that the Government of India was dishonest; but he appears to have said that there was little difference between a plea put forward by the Government and an admission of unavoidable dishonesty. Whether an action which cannot be helped can be called dishonest is an ethical quibble into which we need not enter. It is sufficient to note that Mr. King's expression is one from which successive orators might, by dexterously insensible gradations, arrive at the bald statement: "Government is a thief." Now, no assemblage of Government servants would claim the right to tacitly acquiesce in public, much less to applaud, such a sentiment; but where, then, are they to draw the line? and where will the Government draw the line? Our telegram shows where Mr. Parsons drew it; and it also shows that those present thought him foolish for doing so. But the gradations might be made so fine that no hair-splitting could indicate the point where constitutional protest ended, and the "abuse of Government," objected to by Mr. Parsons, began. It is the revival of the same doubt to which we have referred above, only a little further on and in an accentuated form. Government has tacitly acquiesced in public agitation by its servants; and has now to make up its mind whether the ordinary language of such agitations is to be allowed. If the Government remains silent Mr. Parsons' protest may be regarded by the public in the sense in which those present at Mr. King's dinner accepted it—as being altogether uncalled for. Government may, at any rate, be credited with the confidence that a body of gentlemen, such as compose the Indian services, will not transgress the bounds of propriety in their arguments; and their non-official advocates, after the warning conveyed in Mr. Parsons' outburst, may be trusted to realise the difficulties of the position of their audiences. At Home Mr. King may luxuriate in the wide limits of "parliamentary" language; but for his audiences in India a stricter selection of epithets may be necessary. On this understanding there should be no reason whatever to apprehend Government action.

Nevertheless, the somewhat ambiguous position of the U.C.S. agitation will continue to necessitate caution; and any natural development of the processes, by which the claims of Government servants to better treatment have been advocated hitherto, may bring their advocates in contact with rocks ahead. A day or two ago, for instance, we commented upon the new field for agitation which was opened up in India by Lord Cross's statement that he would consider the opinions of the Supreme and Local Governments in India on the subject. Obviously, then, the best way is to impress Lord Cross is to impress the Local Governments and the Government of India. Equally obviously the best way to effect this is to approach the different Governments with petition or deputations. Nothing is simpler, and the Punjab Association has, we believe, already proposed to the Calcutta Association that something like this should be done. Unfortunately, however, nothing is more likely than that persons who object to things "on principle" may rise up, like Mr. Parsons at the banquet, and refuse to allow public servants to continue to petition and deputate contrary to the rules of the service. The frame of mind which would dictate this attitude is not foreign to our Secretariats as a rule; and it is through Secretariats that Governments must be approached. Nevertheless, our advice to the Uncovenanted Services would be to keep pegging away. Sufficient unto the day are the obstructions thereof. When the agitation first commenced, the fear that individuals might suffer for the part they took in it kept many away, and caused more to be but half-hearted in the cause. The danger proving visionary, courage has been infused into all ranks; and the Government, not having made a stand at the outset, as was expected, has now the choice, either to give way altogether and allow the agitation to be carried to its logical conclusion, or to take up a position less tenable than that which was abandoned at first without resistance. In any case there must be an artificiality about any objections now raised to the progress of the agitation, which cannot fail to encourage its advocates, and would probably influence public opinion at home, in believing that the case against compliance with the U.C.S. demands is equally unreal; as, of course, it is.

COMPLIMENTARY.

(Bengal Times.)

Some few days ago, referring to High Court changes, a Calcutta paper—Indian Planters' Gazette—remarked:—

"Should the Honourable Mr. Justice Norris vacate the Original Bench, the Native section of the community will rejoice muchly, for this learned judge has too much of the honest straightforward 'facts-is-facts' Englishman in his character to please their sensitive disappreciation of the strict rules of veracity. Perhaps his successor will make greater allowances for the national failure."

Nobody acquainted with life in India can doubt that this paragraph was indicted with a strict adhesion to fact and a fair insight into Native character generally. Far from acquiescing in its fidelity to ordinary experience, Reis and Rayyet attempts to refute it thus:—

"And this from a parvenu nation of pedlars and hucksters among whom adulteration has been raised to a science and falsehood to a fine art, to the most ancient race who have civilised the world, who did not know what chicane, guile, or evasion was, until the stranger came and set up shop and school on their shores, whose literature and annals are full of the most sublime lessons of fidelity, whose everyday life at this moment, even in this degenerate age, under abnormal conditions, exhibits the most heroic examples of honour and truth!"

Before we venture to meet so ungrateful and unjustifiable an imputation upon a nationality but for whose existence the Reis and Rayyet editor would now be performing menial offices under a Mussulman taskmaster, instead of fulminating tirades against benefactors who have shielded his ancestors from every conceivable outrage that can be offered to enslaved humanity, let us see what that hero Dhulip Singh—himself a Native of India, hence supposed to be an unprejudiced witness—has to say of Bengalees. Writing from Spence's Hotel, Calcutta, in 1861, upon revisiting India, he expresses himself thus:—

Digitized by Google

"Now I must tell you that India is a beastly place. I heartily repent having come out, for I cannot get a moment's peace with people following me, and all my old servants bother the life out of me with questions. The heat is something dreadful, and what will it be in another month? I hate the Natives, they are such liars, flatterers, and extremely deceitful! I would give anything to be back in dear England among my friends."

Seeing then what opinion was held of Natives of India, by one who, from earliest infancy was reared among them, it might have been wise in our contemporary to have left Englishmen alone, but as he has thought fit to attack all classes of our countrymen with rancour born of revenge, jealousy, and pettymindedness stimulated by a love of misrepresentation, we will tell him some home truths. Firstly, we are not a nation of pedlars or hucksters, and never have been. Napoleon, in his pride of conquest, styled us a nation of shopkeepers, and he discovered at Waterloo that this much despised people could and did defeat, in open battle, the flower of Europe's chivalry, as they had done on many previous occasions, and finally dictated a policy to Europe. England was and is even now, queen paramount afloat, as a result of her shopkeeping! If we admit that adulteration has been raised to a science we do so in the full consciousness that England has been far oustripped by America, by France and Germany, by Turkey, and lastly by Bengal, where not an ounce of unadultered flour, ghee, butter, milk and some other staples are procurable in their pure state. As regards falsehood, we may say that we have not yet transformed it into a fine art, nor is there much prospect that we shall ever do so. Did we attempt it, India would eclipse and distance us, since it is tolerably well admitted that, in presence of a Bengalee, Ananias, and Sapphira would blush at their own insignificance. And let our contemporary not forget that, by his own admission, an Englishman, when perverting the truth, does so as a matter of art, whereas his own countrymen feel that falsehood is second nature with them. Indeed, many a Bengalee has admitted to us that life without it would be savourless. Then, again, Bengalees are not the most ancient civilisers of humanity—a fact that a very superficial knowledge of history will demonstrate. That they did not what chicane, guile, or even evasion meant till Englishmen landed on their shores, may be easily refuted by historical research. We have read of long periods in their ancient records, during which drunkenness, debauchery, and every sensual vice that debases humanity were practised habitually by high and low, rich and poor, literate and illiterate, till the land groaned under a weight of corruption. Nor can we allow that their literature, taken as such, as an outgrowth of national culture, is not deformed by a viciousness and profligacy that puts to shame every other known literature, while at this moment, Bengalee immorality is such that, narrowing our remarks, we have medical authority for asserting that, not a Native family out of six can be found in East Bengal—and this proportion presupposes a liberal margin—in which at least one member will not be found exhibiting in his own person traces of a lasciviousness too revolting to be shaped into language. We advance it honestly, and as a result of not inconsiderable study and observation that, the mental attitude of Bengalees is simply putrid, as compared with the mental freshness, manly vigour and healthiness of Englishmen generally. Our contemporary has reckoned without his host, in his sweeping denunciation of a nation to which his own people owe a debt of gratitude which they can never repay. If he will but look to defects patent in Bengalees, he will, it is hoped, if only for decency's sake, refrain from carping at motes in others, and overlooking beams in his own.

BENGAL.

(Dec. 11.)

THE Calcutta Art Exhibition will be opened about the 20th January.

MR. A. E. C. CASEY has been permitted to resign the Bengal Civil Service.

MR. H. B. TURNER, of Messrs. Turner, Morrisson, and Co., has been appointed Sheriff of Calcutta for the next year.

THE Hon. Mr. Justice Romesh Chunder Mitter has sent in the resignation of his appointment as a Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

MR. JUSTICE GOOROO DASS BANERJEE has been nominated by the Viceroy to the post of Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University, vacant by the resignation of Sir Comer Petheram.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL COLLETT, who has just returned from England, will consult with the Bengal authorities regarding the precautionary measures necessary on the Cachar frontier against the Lushais before proceeding to take up his command in Assam.

THE building of the main portion of the new Dufferin Zenana Hospital, Calcutta, will be begun immediately. The estimated cost is nearly Rs. 42,000 for a building of two stories, but a third story must be added before the main hospital can be said to be complete. At present a sum of Rs. 43,000 is available, but at least Rs. 50,000 more are required on account of necessary buildings, &c., exclusive of a third story. The site has already cost Rs. 55,000 and it is hoped that the sum required to perfect the scheme will be raised during the present cold season. Rai Ketter Chunder Banerjee Bahadur, now engaged in constructing the Eden Hospital, has engaged to build the new hospital within six months.

MUNICIPAL ADDRESS TO PRINCE VICTOR.—The following the text of the address that the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta will present to the Prince:—"May it please your Royal Highness,—We, the Corporation of Calcutta, most respectfully bid your Royal Highness welcome to our city. Scion of a Monarchy, the most ancient in Europe, heir to an Empire surpassing that of the Cæsars, how can we find words worthy to commemorate your advent to the metropolis of Her Majesty's Eastern possessions? India, the classic land of the Mahabharatta Kingdom, of illustrious Akbar, studded with peerless monuments of bygone glories, seems to us, who have the honour to represent the capital, a land so rich in boundless plains, so unrivalled in lofty mountains, so populous with teeming millions, so engrossing in its new life and nascent interests, that we can hardly realise that it is but an appanage to the crown of Her Majesty, on whose dominions it is justly said the sun never sets, and whose banner your Royal Highness has seen floating proudly over every quarter of the habitable globe and the countless isles of the ocean. Yet, glorious as is that crown, and world-wide as is the power behind it, it is at once the noblest and truest tribute we can say of it, that its mighty material force is overshadowed by the love and reverence on which the throne reposes. In no part of the Empire have these guarantees for the stability of Her Majesty's dynasty developed more rapidly than in Hindustan, especially since the ever memorable year when, assuming direct rule over us, Her Majesty addressed us these heartfelt and stirring words which are still ringing in our ears. Loyalty to the person of the Sovereign is the plant that thrives in the fertile soil of India. The Queen's name is cherished and beloved in every household. In her the people of India realise their ideal of a monarch, wife, mother, and widow. Our one regret is that it has not been possible for her, in her own gracious person, to visit her Indian Empire; but she is known to us through her sons, and now also in the person of her grandson. Our two next Sovereigns will have seen with their own eyes the length and breadth of this noble Continent, and we venture to hope that their visits, which have undoubtedly knit the people of India more closely to the throne in willing allegiance, will also have won them a secure and prominent place in the affections of their future rulers. Not in Calcutta alone, but throughout Hindustan, all the varied races and creeds unite in praying the Almighty Ruler of the Universe to preserve the lives of your Royal father and yourself, that you may in the fulness of time succeed to the splendid inheritance, and also so to dispose and guide your actions that you may transmit, undimmed, to those who follow after you the priceless heirloom of the honour, esteem, and love of the nations united under your sway."

MADRAS.

(Dec. 11.)

THE PRINCE IN MADRAS.—A writer in a Madras paper says—"In harmony with that slip-shod fashion into which she has glided of late years Madras gave Prince Albert Victor but a graceless and a second-class greeting. A hurried address from the Municipal Commissioners, a strip of red carpet, a tinsel welcome over Government House gates, the Dignity Ball antedated and made to do double service, Colonel Weldon in uniform, and a covey of tame snipe at Chingleput—these sum up the delirious festivities of the Presidency City. The Hon. Mr. Price, Chief Secretary, certainly carried out the snipe-shooting arrangements with complete perfection. He had patrolled the ground for weeks before, and was personally acquainted with each snipe. He will be made a K.C.I.E. The Prince was very much struck with the physique and intelligence of the Municipal Commissioners. On dismounting from his carriage at the railway station he inspected their ranks, and as he walked through the Grenadier battalion of the nominated Commissioners he complimented the President on their aspect of complete self-surrender and well-trained obedience. Colonel Moore blushed."

A FATAL JEST.—A telegram from Madras, dated the 6th inst., to the Civil and Military Gazette, says:—"A shocking accident is reported to have occurred at Cochin. Mr. Klein, the local manager of the firm of Messrs. Volkart Brothers, went for a walk with an assistant after dinner. In the night they called at the house of another assistant, Mr. Stadelmann. They knocked at his door, and then for a joke hid amongst some trees. Mr. Stadelmann went out with a revolver and challenged them several times. On getting no reply he fired, intending to fire over their heads; but the bullet hit Mr. Klein in the neck. He died in an hour, but absolved Mr. Stadelmann from blame. The latter had no idea who the visitors were."

A Governor's Christmas Tour.—"One of Them" writes to the Madras Mail regarding Lord Connemara's approaching tour:—"It is not without some regret that the announcement of the Governor's approaching visit to the Godavery has been received by the officials in that district. Pleased as all people are to welcome his Excellency when he comes amongst them, and grateful as all must be for the lively appreciation which he thereby shows for the welfare of the district most distant as well as the most near to Madras, the fact that he intends to pay a visit to us during the Christmas holidays converts the pleasure into something akin to a hardship. The Northern Circars are so cut off from the rest of Madras that it is only during the ten days of the Christmas holidays that we can get away to Madras or other centres of amusement. Plans for Christmas relaxation are made by us months beforehand, and it is a time when official formality is in abeyance, and the departmental lion lies down with the departmental lamb. Red tape and routine are forgotten, and everybody is determined to enjoy himself. The Governor will be avowedly on duty bent when he visits the Godavery, and even if he were not a certain amount of ceremony must always be connected with a gubernatorial visit, and this cannot fail to influence the celebration of Christmas. We have no desire to seem churlish or inhospitable to a Governor who himself is so exactly the opposite, but we cannot help hoping that he will postpone his visit until after our hard-earned holidays are over, and we have resumed our usual functions and habits."

Madras Cricketers Disappointed.—It has turned out, as the Madras Mail expressed a fear that it would, that the English cricket team is not to visit Madras at all. This can only be attributable to the selfishness of those Calcutta gentlemen in whose hands the arrangements for Mr. Vernon's team had been left. It does seem hard that these gentlemen should have had it all their own way. Naturally the English team were prevented from making their own arrangements by the slowness of communication between England and India; but why a committee formed of representatives from the whole of India was not chosen to make up the programme of the tour it is difficult to say. There is no doubt that if such had been the case the whole tour would have been much more satisfactorily arranged, and we should not have seen the unique spectacle of the Allahabad paper coolly picking out on its own responsibility the team that was to represent India in the match of "All India" against Mr. Vernon's team. The team that would have represented Madras was to have been composed as follows:—Messrs. R. J. H. Arbuthnot, H. G. Wedderburn, Major Harris, Lieutenant Faunce, Lieutenant Dewing, Lieutenant Rowe, Lieutenant Tancock, Mr. H. C. King, Captain Fowle, Mr. A. R. Wilson, and Mr. D. J. McFarlan. With such a team Madras might well have hoped to have at least done better than Ceylon. We trust that it is not yet too late to remove the wrong that has been done to Madras by the fortuitous possession of the powers of arrangement having been centred in Calcutta.

BOMBAY.

(Dec. 13.)

Captain H. M. Abad acts as Third Assistant Political Resident, Aden.

Surgeon-Major G. Bainbridge, I.M.S., Civil Surgeon, Kurrachee, has been allowed furlough to Europe for one year.

Dr. A. D. Pollen, Judge and Sessions Judge of Belgaum, has been allowed privilege leave for two months and twenty-six days.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Telang received the letters-patent appointing him a Judge of the High Court on Monday last.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Jardine returned to Bombay from Europe by the P. and O. mail steamer on Tuesday night. Mr. J. D. Inverarity, barrister-at-law, also returned to Bombay from Aden by the same steamer.

The Hon. Rao Bahadur Bechurdas Veharidas, who came to Bombay to attend the Legislative Council, left for Neriad on Wednesday night.

The services of Surgeon A. F. Ferguson, M.B., C.M., Indian Medical Service, have been replaced at the disposal of H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief.

Brigade-Surgeon A. N. Hojel, Physician European General Hospital, Bombay, has been allowed privilege leave of absence for three months, from Jan. 3, 1890.

Lieutenant W. H. Errington, 1st Battalion South Staffordshire Regiment, officiating Wing Officer 1st Regiment Bombay Infantry, has been admitted to the Bombay Staff Corps

The English postal authorities have not yet fixed a date for the commencement of the new Saturday mail departure from Bombay. The arrangement involves a good deal of communication both with the Australian Governments and the P. and O. Company.

Our readers will be glad to hear that General Budgen is progressing very favourably. Though the injury to the knee is unquestionably severe, there has been, we understand, next to no constitutional disturbance, and there is every prospect of a satisfactory result. Surgeon-Major Banks has charge of the case, and with Dr. Wellington Gray in consultation, it will be seen that the General could not possibly be in better hands.

We are very glad indeed to hear that Mr. John Marshall has been appointed Sheriff of Bombay during the ensuing year. We congratulate Mr. Marshall heartily—and we also congratulate the Government. The appointment will be popular at once with Europeans and natives, for Mr. Marshall is one of the most popular as well as one of the most industrious and deserving of our citizens. He is generally known throughout India as the energetic Secretary of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce. Locally, however, he is perhaps best appreciated as a veteran expert in everything connected with cotton, and as the founder and pioneer of our new and important flour-milling industry.

The following appointments in the Grant Medical College have been made:—Surgeon L. F. Childe, M.B., to be Professor of Pathology and Morbid Anatomy, and Curator, Pathological Museum, vice Surgeon-Major G. Waters, transferred. Brigade-Surgeon D. E. Hughes, M.D., F.R.C.S., to be substantive pro tem. Professor of Hygiene, vice Surgeon-Major G. Waters, transferred. Surgeon C. H. L. Meyer, M.D., to be Professor of Hygiene, with effect from the date on which Brigade-Surgeon D. E. Hughes, M.D., F.R.C.S., ceases to act as First Physician, Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital, and to be substantive pro tem. Professor of Hygiene. For purpose of precedence in the College, Surgeon C. H. L. Meyer, M.D., remains senior to Surgeon L. F. Childe, M.B.

The Government of Bombay has appointed Mr. H. F. Silcock as the British representative in connection with the demarcation of the Bombay line between his Highness the Nizam's Dominions and the Bombay Presidency. Mr. Silcock will work in the fields conjointly with a representative nominated by the Nizam's Government, and separate reports of their labours will be forwarded to their respective heads of Government. Mr. Silcock is now busily engaged in scrutinising the records at the Secretariat, with the view of ascertaining the extent of the delimitation as proposed by both Governments. The local Government specially selected Mr. Silcock to carry out this duty, as his qualifications in that line could not have suggested itself to the Government to hit upon a better selection.

The following has appeared in the orders of the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay:—His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief has learnt with the deepest regret of the untimely death of Colonel A. R. Heyland, Commandant, 1st Bombay Lancers. This officer, but recently promoted for good service in Burma, received the wound which caused his death while gallantly endeavouring to capture a Sowar who had already shot down two Native officers of the regiment, one of whom, Russeldar-Major Daulat Sing, also lately decorated for his bravery, has succumbed to his wounds. In Colonel Heyland the army has lost a chivalrous gentleman and a keen soldier, who had ever the good of the service and the welfare of his men at heart, and who was one of the best cavalry leaders in the service. His Royal Highness feels sure that the detestation universally felt at the dastardly act of one misguided man is shared by all ranks of the 1st Lancers, and that the whole Bombay Army unites with the Commander-in-Chief in lamenting the loss to the service of two such distinguished officers.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

The services of Mr. J. H. Budden, of the North-West Provinces Educational Department, tutor to the minor Nawab of Rampore, which were at first temporarily placed at the disposal of the Rampore State, have now been extended for the entire period of the minority of the Nawab.

The Engineer-in-Chief's office for the newly sanctioned "Frontier Railway Survey" has been opened at Rawalpindi from 2nd December, 1889. Mr. Ramsay, the Engineer-in-Chief, is still at Calcutta, and will reach Rawalpindi on or about the 16th inst.

A public dinner will be given to Mr. H. S. King, M.P., should he pay a visit to Lahore.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE REPRESENTATIVE MEN OF INDIA.*

The sumptuous volume, which is the first of an intended series, is very appropriately dedicated "by permission" to the "Queen Empress of India." The work contemplated by Mr. Sobraji Jehangir is an ambitious one—but he deserves success, and we join in the hope which Sir George Birdwood expresses in his preface, that it will also receive the patronage of the Government as an act of official sympathy with the objects of the author. "The gradual establishment," writes Sir George, "of amicable personal relations on terms of equality between Englishmen and the natives of India must in turn lead to a yet firmer administration of the Imperial Government, involving the increased efficiency of the public services, and the conferring of greater material benefits, and larger political privileges on the people themselves. In its own way such a work as the present is calculated to contribute to this most devoutly to be desired consummation; and it is chiefly in the hope that it will do good by promoting mutual forbearance, respect, and trustfulness between the widely different races, and intricately-mixed classes and communities of the Indian Empire that I have consented to link my name with an undertaking upon which my friend Mr. Sorabji Jehangir has expended no inconsiderable amount of time and attention, and has so far carried through with conspicuous tact, discretion, and impartiality. I sincerely commend his volume to the notice of English readers, and I trust it will also receive the patronage of Government, and that not alone on its intrinsic merits, although these, as is obvious, are substantial, but as an act of official sympathy with the objects of the author, which would be warmly reciprocated throughout India. Such official amenities have fallen into almost complete disusage since the Empire founded by the great Company was, in 1858, sequestrated to the Crown; but the little expenditure they necessitate would be well and widely incurred; for of no people in the world is it truer—nor, indeed, so true—as of the simple, patient, and confiding people of India 'the blameless (easterly) Æthiopians' of Homer, that—in the words I have had before my eyes from the beginning—'grace begets grace.'"

So far well; but to make a perfect work of this kind the expenditure would be anything but "little." It should, however, have been commenced by somebody long ago—say from the time of the first Viceroy, Lord Canning. Now, it must be an imperfect and therefore unsatisfactory series. It is true that Mr. Sorabji Jehangir's intention was to present portraits of the living only; but already several of his subjects have died before the book is in the hands of the public. This is a difficulty which he will have further to contend with as he proceeds. But his idea is a good one, only, as we have said, it should have been present to some official mind long ago, and have been carried out under official auspices. Why should there not have been by this time a portrait gallery in the India Office of the distinguished men, European and Native, who have done good service to England in building up her great Eastern Empire? Even if the series went back no further than to Lord Canning's Viceroyalty the possession of so valuable a record—limned by the art "which baffles Time's tyrannic claim to quench it," would have been something for Englishmen to be grateful for. As it is, we have nothing to say but in praise of Mr. Jehangir's attempt to supply the deficiency now. He is most modest in appraising his own labours, but which have nevertheless been no light ones. The Biographical Notices which accompany the several portraits are very well done; and the portraits themselves—photographs prepared for printing by Messrs. Vincent Brooks, Day and Son—exhibit great care and artistic skill. The likenesses of the Nizam, Lord Northbrook, the Gaekwar of Baroda, Lord Ripon, and the late Sir Salar Jung are specially excellent. The value of the work is much enhanced by the very charming Preface by Sir George Birdwood, written with much grace and graphic power. His own portrait should have found a place in this volume; but, as according to Mr. Sorabji Jehangir's principle of selection, only the faces of a new generation were to appear, Sir George found it impossible to allow himself to be separated from the old familiar faces of the generation he knew in the Western Presidency, and who are now departed, so with much pathos he writes that he had no heart to appear in the volume himself, for "in truth, although time has been said to be the physician of every pain, it has never yet softened the sorrow of my long years of separation from my 'Old Bombay' settia friends." Sir George points out one defect in the present volume which no doubt the author will rectify in future ones—namely, "the absence from it of any representative of the noble womanhood of India." Mr. Sorabji Jehangir is fortunate in having so kind and sympathetic a mentor. We commend this book highly to all who take an interest in our great Indian Empire. It is the promise of a work which will have wide and certain influence for good, and we hope that the enterprising author will be liberally supported and encouraged in his self-imposed task.

So far as the "getting up" of the book itself, it reflects the highest credit on artists, printers and publishers.

By Sorabji Jehangir, Chief Magistrate of Baroda, in the Service of his Highness the Maharaja Gaekwar, G.C.S.I. With an Introduction by Sir George Birdwood, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., M.D., LL.D. (W. H. A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.*

It is not easy to review a work the publication of which is at intervals extending over a long period of years; and the difficulty is considerably enhanced in the case of a dictionary, the value of which cannot, in the nature of things, be judged save by the test of actual experience. We are tempted to make these remarks consequent on the appearance of Part V. of the colossal "Historical Dictionary of the English Language," prepared under the direction of Mr. Murray, "with the assistance of many scholars and men of science."

There is really nothing more to be said in regard to this gigantic work, save that as time goes on it becomes more than ever apparent that the case in point is an illustration of the classical quotation, "Vita brevis, ars longa est." For all practical purposes of life the compilation is too exhaustive in its scope. Taking the present rate of progress, it will be at least thirty years before the dictionary is complete; and were it not that the expenditure is of necessity spread over a long period of years the cost would be prohibitive. But, it may be argued, this criticism is really high praise, because a work of this nature is not required for everyday life, but for purposes of scholarship and the settlement of vexed questions of literary propriety and such-like. Well, so be it; we have no intention of hostile criticism. In fact, the work, if sound—as is doubtless the case—must be a law alike to itself and to those who consult it; and we bow the head in submission to its edicts.

A LITTLE BROWN PEBBLE.†

It is seldom that scientific subjects are treated in a popular and entertaining style; but "A Little Brown Pebble," by S. L. Pumphrey, is certainly an exception to the rule. From first to last interest never flags, and there are few Christmas tales more suitable as a gift than this simple and unpretentious little volume.

A LITTLE PRIMROSE KNIGHT.‡

Lavish praise is as easy to dole out as it is valueless when received. Yet, withal, we venture to lay our tribute of admiration at the foot of one of the most charming sketches which it has been our privilege to read for many a year. "The Little Primrose Knight" is an exquisitely conceived story, as fascinating and replete with interest as it is stirring and sweet. The characters are drawn with the hand of a practised writer for children; and well would it be if all "Primrose Dames" could in like manner aid the good cause by a brochure which appeals to any and every member of the most successful patriotic institution in the British Empire.

THE importation of Australian horses into Calcutta this season promises to be less than last year's, when the normal quantity was swollen by the large arrivals from New Zealand. That country appears at present to have no surplus to send. Approximately the total importations of 1888 were about 3,800; those of this season will probably not exceed 2,500.

AN extraordinary attempt to murder was brought to the notice of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on Dec. 10th. A Punjabi, condemned to transportation for life, managed to make good his escape from Perak Jail, and returned to India. He was arrested at Ajmere, where Mr. Rawlins, the Jailor of Perak prison, identified him, and took him in charge. On his way to Calcutta in the train he picked up a bayonet and made a murderous assault on Mr. Rawlins, wounding him seriously on the chest and arm. He was, however, secured, and is now incarcerated in the Presidency Jail, pending despatch of a vessel to Singapore.

INDIAN INVESTMENTS.

III.—DISTRUSTFUL FRIENDS.

THE letter in our last week's issue, bearing the well known initials "W. M. W.," came too late to hand for editorial notice, our leader having gone to press before our correspondent's letter was read. On the subject about which we are endeavouring to create some interest amongst British capitalists, large and small, "W. M. W." is one of the best-informed of Anglo-Indians. He has the pen not only of a ready writer, but he has a thorough knowledge of India—is a past master in matters of finance, and one whose judgment has been ripened by years of actual experience in the East and at home. We were fully confident that we should have found him a strong advocate on our side; we regret to discover in him another of those "friends of India." who distrust the possibility of doing anything to aid satisfactorily the cause for which we are striving. He thinks evidently that we are piping to those who will not dance; to those whose ears are as deaf as those of the deaf adder to the voice of the charmer—charm he never so wisely. If this be so, wisdom certainly is not justified of her Anglo-Indian children. Our friend certainly wishes us well, and is glad to see what we are doing to get at "a wider circle of investors—that crowd of Mr. Giffen's clients who are constantly pressing forward to swell the income-tax returns," but he does not think we shall succeed. And he gives the following reason for the unfaith that is in him:—

"From my own recent experience the prospects of trying to do people good, in spite of themselves, is not encouraging. Only a few weeks ago, just as the silvertide was turning, I took some pains to set out the facts and inducements in favour of Indian investments in a communication addressed to one of the best of investors' advisers. Week by week he performs this duty with evident care, and to the level best of his British lights; but, somehow, though he suggests investments from Egypt to Mexico, from American rails to China Government Stocks—silver countries all—he always shuns Indian rupee stocks and shares. Though my memorandum was adapted to open up what to his clients would be an extremely new and wider field, under British authority and security, he has not ventured to press on my counsel, even for what it might be worth, to his friends, who are continuously craving for more than the four and five per cent. that he offers them."

We did not know that our friend had been in this financial field before us, and we regret that he did not honour us with a copy of that communication which he addressed to "one of the best of investors' advisers" setting out the "facts and inducements in favour of Indian investments.' It, we may assure him, would have had our strongest support; but as it is "never too late to mend" we may be pardoned by him for hinting that we are ready to receive it now, and to give it all that careful attention which coming from such a source, we are certain it deserves. But we regret, also, to hear that he has become so disheartened as to seemingly retire from the good field he had entered upon, simply because the adviser to whom he sent his memorandum "has not ventured to press his advice upon his friends," who are continuously craving for more than the four or five per cent. that he offers them. We can tell him, from similar experience, that that best of investors' advisers is not the only unbelieving broker or banker in London in the matter of Indian Securities. It has been our unfortunate fate to come across several "investors' advisers" who, possessed of wide and long experience of Indian investments from actual knowledge, and admitting the truth of the arguments we advanced, still held to the opinion that it would be useless for them to try to turn their clients' attention to such investments as we suggested, and which, "W. M. W." rightly conjectures chiefly referred to the silver securities, the enfaced rupee Government paper, Indian banks, and joint stock companies' shares. We were told that the attempt would be loss of time, and loss of time means loss of money to broker or banker in England. If we wrote in terms "more forcible than polite" of the foolishness of the British investor, we may say here that that otherwise confiding creature is not the only person here who dislikes "bother." His business "adviser" very often dislikes it too. He will not take the trouble to point out advantages which may require a little parading of facts and figures which may further have to be supported by a few arguments drawn from experience; he finds his client already "sweet" on some out-of-the-way investment which he has just read of in rosy-tinted prospectus language, and he lets him follow the bent of his own sweet will—unless he knows the scheme to be a swindle. Even then he will suggest a change to any other. investment rather than to an Indian one.

These "distrustful friends" of India are, we are sorry to say, too many; but we hope that "W. M. W." will not, because of his one disappointment, lose heart and give up the fight, or join their ranks. We invite him rather to range himself upon our side, and with his able pen and great knowledge and experience of all Indian monetary questions, help us not only to turn that "jibbing and obstinate colt" (he might use a shorter but less polite monosyllable), the British investor, from barren fields to pastures new and profitable, but also to induce his "best advisers" to lead him there.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

BRIGADE-SURGEON CHURCHILL has received for the new Officers' Ward in his hospital at Rawalpindi, direct from Her Majesty, a picture of herself with her autograph beneath.

AN infantry subaltern from the Native Army will probably be added to the staff of the Gilgit Agency, instead of an artillery officer, as was at first arranged. This change is considered desirable, as the garrison furnished by the Kashmir Durbar will include two regiments of picked infantry armed with Sniders.

AN acknowledgment by the Secretary of State of the ability and energy with which General Sir G. White conducted the operations in Upper Burma, and the excellent services rendered by the officers and men under him, has been received in the usual course by the Government of India.

ANOTHER case of stealing arms has reached the Civil and Military Gazette from Rawalpindi, where five carbines were stolen from the King's Dragoon Guards barracks on the night of Nov. 30. Only a few days before two rifles were stolen from the Sussex Regiment, and one from the Seaforth Highlanders.

THE 5th Lancers, since they went to Meerut, have only lost a non-commissioned officer and a private from typhoid or enteric fever. The regiment has much improved in health since they arrived in Meerut, and from all accounts they like the station very much. Till recently they remained under canvas, but as it was getting too cold for the men they all returned to barracks. They are likely to give a "house warming" shortly.

PRIZES of plate won by soldiers in Her Majesty's possessions abroad for skill at arms are exempted from Customs' duties.

ONE THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED mules for field service have been despatched to Chittagong.

THE story of the mutiny in the 4th Madras Pioneers has been brought to a close with the Commander-in-Chief's confirmation of the sentences passed by the Court-Martial.

OFFICERS commanding regiments are authorised to expend the Commandant's allowance of ammunition in any field practice or practices which they may consider will afford the most practical instruction.

THE Government of India has recently sanctioned the issue of boots to followers under special circumstances, as, for instance, a campaign in mountainous countries where the wear and tear of shoes is excessive, or when for other reasons it is expedient that they should be issued.

LAST year the Government sanctioned a proposal to admit to Durbars all Native officers, whether serving or pensioned. Since then several Native officers, on retirement, have applied to retain their Government uniform, which ordinarily they would have to relinquish, in order that they may be able to attend Durbars, but Government has refused to entertain such applications.

THE Pioneer says:—The Home authorities have not yet replied to the despatch of the Government of India regarding colonels' appointments and the qualifying service necessary in connection with them, but we have good reason to believe that the view held in this country—that the service will suffer if only lieutenant-colonels of three years' standing are to be eligible for the higher posts on the Staff—is gaining favour at the India Office and the Horse Guards. In the Staff Corps we now have majors commanding regiments, and officers of this standing are surely fit to be assistant adjutant-generals. In England, where the duties of Staff Officers are comparatively light, men past their prime may discharge them satisfactorily enough; but in India we want the pick of the service on the Staff, for upon their intelligence and energy the good administration of the army must mainly depend. If lieutenant-colonels of three years in the ranks are to be solely drawn upon, we shall soon have no one under twenty-five years' service in posts which have hitherto been held by majors or senior captains—a change which is certainly not desirable in peace time, and one which may bring deplorable consequences during a hard campaign. Promotion by selection from among officers who have shown special aptitude for the work of their profession, and have not exhausted either their enthusiasm or their vigour, is what is required for an army serving in a tropical climate.

PRESENTATION OF VICTORIA CROSS TO SURGEON CRIMMIN.

A full dress parade of all troops in garrison was held at Poona, Dec. 6, to witness the presentation to Surgeon Crimmin, Indian Medical Service, of the Victoria Cross. The ceremony was witnessed by a large crowd of spectators, among whom were the Duchess of Connaught and Mr. Childers. The troops were drawn up facing the west front line. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by his staff, and Sir John Sterling Maxwell, Hon. E. Willoughby, and Lieutenant Milner, Scots Guards, rode up at a quarter past eight, and the troops formed three sides of a square, the Infantry being the base, the Cavalry and Artillery the wings. Surgeon Crimmin was then led up by Surgeon-General Webb, Indian Medical service, followed by all the doctors in garrison to the Duke of Connaught, who pinned the Cross on his breast. After doing so H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught said:—"Her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to confer on you the Order of the Victoria Cross. I have the great pleasure in carrying out her Majesty's commands. I most heartily congratulate you, Surgeon Crimmin, on the great honour that has been conferred on you, and on the great bravery displayed by you in devotion to your duty, when serving with the 27th Beloochis at the action near Lwekaw, in Eastern Karenni. This is the first time I have had the pleasure of presenting a Victoria Cross, and I need not say how greatly this is enhanced by giving it to an officer of the Bombay Army, who has so nobly carried out his arduous duties in the field, risking his life in attending the wounded under a heavy fire. May you live long to wear this much-coveted distinction, and to set an example of bravery and devotion to all who have the honour of serving the Queen and their country." The troops were then re-formed into line, and marched past, Surgeon Crimmin occupying a place by the side of the Duke at the saluting base.

SPORT IN MYSORE.

MADRAS, DEC. 12.

Lord Claud Hamilton arrived in Madras this morning from Mysore, and in an interview informed me that the accounts published in the Indian newspapers, as to his shikar experiences in Mysore, were largely exaggerated. The following is Lord Claud's own tale of what happened:—A large party, including the Maharaja of Caton, Mr. Woodville, special correspondent of the Illustrated London News, Mr. Meiklejohn, Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Vinicum Davy, Dr. Benson Charringtou, Mr. Sheshadri Iyer Dewan, and myself started from Mysore on Monday morning after a tigress, which had been some days previously enclosed in a palisading made of ropes, bushes, trees, &c., about twenty miles from Mysore in a south-westerly direction with the Nilgiri range, on the left circumference of the area, about 450 yards. Mr. Basappaji Urs, the Maharajah's brother, directed all the shooting operations, assisted by 500 beaters. For six hours on Monday every attempt was made with guns, rockets, drums, and musical instruments to move the tigress, but it was quite unsuccessful. The jungle being very thick the beaters were frightened to enter the enclosure, not knowing where the beast lay concealed. Not seeing the tigress that day we went out again on Tuesday to the enclosure, near which Mr. Basappaji Urs had his own tent pitched, where he stayed during the night keeping watch. Before we arrived at the enclosure beaters had cut down a portion of the edge, thus slightly narrowing the enclosure, so as to give them a better opportunity of looking round for the tigress. Beating commenced about noon, and was continued some hours, but with the same result as the previous day. On Wednesday morning a comparatively large opening was made into the enclosure, the members of the party, armed with rifles, being ranged at short intervals all round. The Maharajah and myself took a position on the platform erected on the trees at the farthest inner side of this opening, the Maharajah having kindly made this arrangement to enable me to have the first shot, the rest of the party taking up seats on other trees not far away. After beating had been going on for about an hour and a-half the tigress was moved from her lair, and passed close beneath the tree on which Mr. Meiklejohn was seated. The latter observed the brute, but did not fire, according to an arrangement previously made. The tigress then dodged about. After a further delay of half an hour she bounded out from the dense nullah, giving a dreadful roar. Surveying the place for a minute or two she rushed towards the spot where the Maharajah and myself were seated at full galop. Much excitement, of course, prevailed, but owing to my hat being accidentally knocked over my face I was unable to get a shot. The Maharajah then fired, but missed, as did Mr. Woodville, who fired immediately after. Mr. Vinicum Davy, however, took the next shot, and, taking splendid aim, sent a bullet through the tigress's head, killing her on the spot, the place where she fell being within a few paces of where we were seated. The brute was nearly full grown, measuring nearly nine feet from nose to tip of tail. Another tiger is reported to be in a neighbouring nullah. The Maharajah has gone in pursuit of it. On being examined, the tigress, which was heavy, was found to contain in the inside two cubs, which would probably have been born in about two days. While the party was proceeding to the jungles on Tuesday morning much amusement was occasioned by an incident in which Mr. Woodville played the principal part. The party, including the Maharajah and Lord Claud Hamilton, were proceeding on elephants, when suddenly Mr. Woodville, who was riding a horse in the rear, was seen in a great state of excitement, and he jumped from his horse into a bush and was next observed rolling on the ground with a dagger in his mouth and a large piece of a huge snake's tail clutched in his hands. He, it appeared, had tried to pull the snake from its hole, but the tail broke off, sending him sprawling on the ground. It was subsequently ascertained that it was a rock snake, ten feet long.

HARMFUL KINDNESS?

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Medical men, when they speak on behalf of the sick under their charge, have an authority greater than excellencies; and we, therefore, publish in another column a letter which strongly urges medical officers in charge of military hospitals to combine and respectfully represent that the visits of commanders-in-chief and others to military hospitals should be discontinued. Our correspondent contends that these visits do more harm than good; because, while they may raise the spirits of convalescents, and so hasten complete recovery, they over-excite patients whose condition is critical, with occasionally serious results. We must confess that our opinion does not at once coincide with this. One of the most pleasing lights in which great personages, from Her Majesty downwards, have appeared to those into whose hearts their kindness has won a way, has always been the dim light of the hospital ward. The subject is one that painters and poets of all ages have loved to dwell upon; and many an old pensioner almost counts his proud and hale old life from that day when Royalty came to his bedside and spoke a few cheering words to him. To say then, as our medical correspondent says, that such visits generally do more harm than good, is to shatter a valued illusion. We will not, however, part with it on the authority of one doctor; and if—as it is the privilege of doctors to disagree—the profession are not at one on this subject, we shall continue to believe that the kindness of heart which dictates the Commander-in-Chief's hospital visits has its full reward in the cheery gratitude and consequently increased chance of recovery of the sick. At the same time, arrangements might, if necessary, be made, where any patients are known to be in so critical a state that the excitement would do serious harm, for keeping them out of harm's way. As, moreover, our correspondent notes, as a factor in his complaint, the jingling spurs, &c., of the Commander-in-Chief's following, no one would, we feel sure, if medical opinion should, upon inquiry, recommend it, be more ready to leave his ceremonial surroundings at the door of the hospital. The sick, we are equally sure, would not less appreciate the kindness of the action, if the Commander-in-Chief came to them alone—except for the doctor—just as their own friends would come.

A DELEGATION of tea-planters has interviewed the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab on the subject of the extinction of the green tea trade through Afghanistan, owing to the Amir's crushing taxes. The deputation was composed of Mr. Leslie Rogers, representing the planters of Dehra; Mr. Dogson, president of the Kangra Planters' Association, representing Kangra and Kulu; and Mr. Bellairs, representing the planters of Kumaon.

Two cadet regiments of boys between the ages of eight and ten have been raised in Kabul. The boys are of mixed nationality, Afghan, Kabuli, Kohistan, Kazilbash and Tajaki. When they reach the age of fourteen, they are to be employed as the bodyguard of the Governor of Kabul. They attend school, and are drilled and disciplined by experienced officers. Every Friday they parade before the Governor, and are then dismissed for a holiday. The boys get Rs. 4, 5, or 6 per mensem. The plan, with modifications, is one which has been recommended more than once for adoption in India, especially with the boys of our Goorkhas. It would encourage the military spirit of the Native troops if the men could see their sons so early in life making a living and starting to follow in their father's footsteps.

BI-METALLISM.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Mr. Robert Giffen, in England, and Mr. O'Conor, in India, are excellent authorities on commercial affairs; but Mr. Giffen in his letter to-day in the Times appears to have gone to extremes in his advocacy of gold.

The simple question is between creditors and debtors. The men of London are creditors all over the world, and are determined not to be paid in silver.

Mr. Giffen notices that six hundred millions sterling of banking liabilities at call can be demanded in gold. If creditors have strong reasons for applying the screw, universal bankruptcy in every country nf the world might be feared.

What is the grievance to be remedied? For sixteen years Prince Bismarck and his coadjutors have been raising the price of gold, which has imposed an intolerable tax on India, China, and other silver countries. In fact, the greatest fear of rebellion in India at present is from agitators who declare that we are pauperising India for the purpose of enriching London bankers. In B.C. 146—2,036 years ago—the Roman bankers ruined the prosperity of Corinth and Carthage. Ego, Romanus sum in banking matters is an unpleasant tradition; Rome itself was, consequently, cursed with civil war.

Festina lente. To remedy the real grievance of our Indian subjects, and of our hard-working Scotch, Irish, and English servants in India, we should first extend the legal tender of silver in England from £2 to £3. If we find that this succeeds in raising the value of the rupee, we can allow debtors to pay up to £4 in silver; and, lastly, if we raise the limit to £5, poor debtors will be enabled to pay their debts in paper and silver, and will have no longer to go down on their knees in search of gold.

Mr. Giffen himself writes regarding the gold which is current in England:—

"It is used as a superior sort of small change for which gold is absolutely necessary, so long as there is no paper of lower denomination than £5."

Instead of introducing £2 bank notes, why should we not raise silver to £5 tenders? Will so moderate a measure alarm millionaires?—Your obedient servant, T.

Dec. 26.

CEYLON TEA.

Tea growing in Ceylon has been making rapid strides of late years, and the prosperity of our possession is acknowledged to be largely due to this cause. At the present time there are about 200,000 acres under tea cultivation, of which 180,000 acres are already in bearing. These teas are becoming very popular in the United Kingdom, and the Home consumption is assuming very large proportions, and now amounts to over 25,350,000 lbs. per annum, against only 3,218,000 in 1885. From a very interesting circular on the tea trade of Ceylon, just issued by Messrs. Gow, Wilson, and Stanton, we learn that the amount of duty paid by Great Britain in 1880, when the industry first commenced, was only £2,871, whereas last year it reached £464,664. One of the most striking features of the present season is the displacement of China tea by Ceylon. Last year the consumption of the former in Great Britain was 43 per cent. of the whole, and Ceylon 10 per cent.; from the beginning of the present year to the end of October the percentage of China teas was 34, and Ceylon 16, while from the beginning of June last the displacement has been still more marked, namely, 32 and 19 respectively; that is to say, for every 32lbs. of China tea consumed in this country 19lbs. of Ceylon have been used. It is not in this country alone where the demand is increasing, for Australia took 1,134,156 lbs. in the year 1888-89, against only 479,626 lbs. in 1887-88, while the exports to America have been nearly doubled. Owing to the efforts which are now being made to open new markets a further expansion must be looked for in the near future.

THERE is some prospect of a direct mail service between Aden and Karachi being established by the British India Steam Navigation Company. Another and most important project to Karachi has been brought forward this time by a syndicate of her merchants, who offered to construct a line of railway from Delhi to Karachi without a guarantee. This would furnish a very satisfactory proof of the practicability of the Bikanir Desert, about which Mr. Horace Bell who lately surveyed the country, held such forlorn views, and Mr. Croudace who is now resurveying is so hopeful that it is highly probable.

A TIGER SHOT SWIMMING.

A friend furnishes the Statesman with the following account of an adventure with a tiger:—

It was 8.30 A.M., on the 14th instant, whilst the little steamer Seal was going ahead 10 knots along the Bhola river, the call of bagh! bagh! from the man on the look-out startled us. The order "stop her" was immediately given, and the vessel came to a stand-still. We then observed on the left bank, about 300 yards ahead, a tiger quietly strolling down to the water's edge from the dense forest above; he gazed at the steamer, but apparently quite unconcerned proceeded calmly into the water. After swimming about for awhile, he evidently made up his mind to try his luck in some other forest for game, and struck out manfully for the opposite shore. The river here is a quarter of a mile broad, and we all were in a state of intense excitement lest the tiger should turn back again. Not a whisper was heard as the vessel drifted quietly with the tide. The brute was now some hundred yards from the bank when I gave the order "Full speed ahead." H. held the rifle and I undertook the steering. Seconds passed like hours, but really only two and a-half minutes elapsed from the start, when we brought up in midstream, the tiger swimming gallantly along some 20 yards off our port bow. H. fired, but missed. The second shot, however, took effect in the neck, evidently a very nasty wound, as he made a big bound and the water became discoloured with blood. The brute then steered for the paddle-wheel, giving us an angry growl as he passed out of sight: in a moment he had clambered up on to paddlebox chair; but fortunately the iron door was fastened. We had no means of getting at him, and the lascar crew, huddled together on the hencoop armed with poles, were in a great state of alarm. Our dangerous friend and unwelcome passenger refused to budge, so the order was given to go slowly ahead. This not only puzzled him, but as he lay with his body right across the axle of the paddle wheel the friction became at last unbearable and he tumbled into the water. However, he was up again in a moment. This was not to be tolerated, so the order was issued "Full speed ahead," and almost at once he was seen on the starboard quarter making for the bank: how he got on that side it is impossible to say. The cry "he'll escape" rang out, and this seemed very probable, as we had to turn three-quarters of a circle to again place ourselves between him and the shore. However, the poor brute was now much exhausted through loss of blood, and made but slow progress; so, soon once more he lay off our port beam, and I sent a shell into his head which ended the career of poor "stripes."

MR. T. D. LITTLE, M.I.C.E., AND RAO BAHADUR KRISHNAJI LAKSHMAN NULKAR, C.I.E., have been appointed additional members of the Council of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay, in the place of Mr. T. H. Stewart, C.S., and the Hon. Mr. Justice Telang, respectively.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME of DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

JEOPARDY OF LIFE, THE GREAT DANGER OF DELAY.

You can change the Trickling Stream, but not the Raging Torrent.

WHAT EVERYBODY SHOULD READ.—How important it is to have at hand some simple, effective, and palatable remedy, such as ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," to check disease at the onset!!! With little trouble you can change the course of the trickling mountain stream, but not the rolling river. It will defy all your tiny efforts. I feel I cannot sufficiently impress this important information upon everybody. Let ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" be your companion; under any circumstances its use is beneficial, and never can do harm. When out of sorts, Restless, Sleepless, yet unable to say why, then your whole body is out of order, but you do not know where it may end; it is a real necessity to have a simple remedy at hand. The Pilot can so steer and direct as to bring the ship into safety, but he cannot quell the raging storm. The common idea when not feeling well is: "I will wait and see; perhaps I shall be better to-morrow;" whereas, had a supply of ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" been at hand, and use made of it at the onset, all calamitous results might have been avoided. What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as untimely Death?

HEADACHE AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering nearly two and a half years from severe Headache and Disordered Stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your 'FRUIT SALT,' and before I had finished one bottle I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health; and others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, "ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford."

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHER SALINES.—"Dear Sir,—Having been in the habit of taking your 'FRUIT SALT' for many years, I think it only right to tell you I consider it a most invaluable medicine, and far superior to all other saline mixtures I have ever tried. I am never without it, as I find it possesses three most desirable qualities—pleasant to the taste, promptly efficacious, and leaves no unpleasant after-effects. I do not wish my name to appear, but you are welcome to make use of this testimonial if it is of service.

ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO," occasionally a desirable adjunct to ENO'S "FRUIT SALT," as a simple and Natural Laxative, Stomachic, Blood, Brain, Nerve, Bile, or Liver Tonic; or, in other words, when taken as directed, their action is as simple as a tomato, whole meal bread or porridge (with scalded milk); you cannot overstate their great value in causing a natural, slow, and gentle action of the Liver; by that means you keep the blood pure and prevent disease. In advanced Life they are everything you could wish. Read Practical Hints on Constipation, Indigestion, Liver Diseases, Impure Blood, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism, how to Prevent Consumption, Jaundice, and other disastrous diseases by Rules for Health and Longevity, &c., in a pamphlet given with each Bottle of ENO'S "VEGETABLE MOTO." EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT

TO

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL

LONDON, MARCH 11, 1889.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

POWDER, SPUR, AND SPEAR.*

Mr. Moray Brown is already known to sporting readers by his work "Shikar Sketches, with Notes on Indian Field Sports." The present volume consists of a series of stories, which the author says were not written with any view of imparting instruction, but merely to while away an idle hour, and in the hope that their perusal might afford some little amusement to the reader. This they certainly will do; for Mr. Brown writes as he rides or shoots—easily and without pretence. Sporting literature is not generally the highest form of the literary art, and Mr. Brown's style may be, here and there, a little rough, like the four-year-old he tells of, who "went forty miles an hour at the fence" with Mr. Brown on his back; or like the Chaudkee-Kopra pig he mentions, who "had, to a certain extent, been 'educated.'" But Mr. Brown carries his readers dashingly along, whether they follow him after the wild boars of the Deccan or "badgering" man-eating tigers in "the open." It will perhaps, however, be somewhat startling to the stay-at-home reader to learn that all the stories told in this volume "are, with one exception, strictly true. That exception is the story entitled 'The Biter Bit,' and even that has a substratum of truth, as far as the plot is concerned." If this be so, and we have Mr. Brown's assurance for it, all we can say is, that the story, with only the substratum of truth in it, reads very tamely after some of the others, which are "facts." Mr. Brown's experiences of the latter are, in many ways, remarkable. For instance, it is nothing new to hear of panthers being shot in the "open," or in the "jungle," but we fancy that it is something new to learn that they climb up trees and go to sleep on the branches. Perhaps this is a peculiarity of the panthers of Dharwar, where the following incident occurred:—

"We had gone, I suppose, some three hundred yards when I happened to look up at a bare tree we were just going to pass under. A something caught my eye, and on looking closer there I spotted my friend extended flat along a branch some twenty to twenty-five feet up, with his head resting between his paws in the fork where the branch grew out of the main stem. I couldn't well miss the brute, and aiming at his head, fired. There was no roar for fuss of any kind; the spotted head merely sank down between the paws, and there the panther stuck. I gave him another shot to make sure, but though dead enough he didn't drop, for death had been so instantaneous that the body stuck in the fork of the tree."

"Now, I believe," adds the narrator of the above, "that panthers often do lie up in trees." Whether panthers lie so or not the "fact" is worth preserving by sporting readers.

"Anecdotes and conversation about tigers and shikar are very charming and interesting." We agree with the writer, especially after reading the story of a Native, who, being suddenly seized by the right arm by a tiger, "had the presence of mind to tear off his pugree with his left arm and stuff it into the tiger's mouth, who then relinquished his hold and went into the jungle shaking and tearing the pugree."

This anecdote, perhaps, "takes the cake," and with it we allow the author to bid us good-bye in his own words. "There, kind reader, I have now related a few incidents which may give you some slight idea of the sport we used to enjoy in those bygone days. I have given the descriptions such as they were written at the time in my diary, the poor and feeble efforts of an ensign's pen, so do not be too critical, I pray thee!"

Certainly not. On the contrary, we think that no sportsman's library will be complete without this work, which is very well illustrated by Messrs. Giles and Giberne, the drawings of the latter deserving special commendation.

* "Powder, Spur, and Spear: a Sporting Medley." By J. Moray Brown, late 79th Cameron Highlanders. With numerous Illustrations by G. D. Giles and Edgar Giberne. (Chapman and Hall.)

"THE BULBUL AND THE BLACK SNAKE."*

This is a very unsatisfactory book. Under the form of a novel it is evidently the writer's own story of a wrong which he considers was done to him many years ago in India, and which still remains unredressed. The doers of the wrong are stated to have been officials of that country, members of the Civil Service chiefly, who are described as unjust, insolent, tyrannical and corrupt. The hero of Mr. Jackson's narrative, who, by his author's description of him, was a hot-headed, unreasonable and unamiable individual, finds on his landing at Calcutta, and reporting himself at the Secretariat there, that "out of sixteen permanent and officiating heads of departments of all sorts, only four actually conducted themselves according to the usual habits of English gentlemen of good family. Four more might possibly have done so had they not been suffering under indisposition of various sorts, causing irritability or apathy; the remaining eight had evidently studied the arts of frigid insolence and rudeness, carried them out systematically, and were markedly proud of it."

But this is not all. The names of some of these objectionable civilians are given, and old Anglo-Indians who read this book will have little difficulty in guessing, for instance, who are meant by Moult-triste, Collector of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs; by Captain Warbler, Paymaster, &c., of Cadets, Fort William; or by Brawford, Collector of Customs, the "rather fat middle-aged man" of "domineering insolence." But the author's venom is more intensely thrown at "The Great Black Snake," who is represented under the name of Mountgummles, Governor of the Punjab. There is no difficulty in recognising the real name meant, but there may be some difficulty in recognising in the following description the man:—

"He seemed to be a coarse, bullying Puritan, full of cant, hypocrisy, and psalm-singing, a leader of prayer-meetings, much in the style of the Salvationists of the present day. Some people described him as very Pecksniffian, but perhaps that was only while on tours and official visits; others described him as very bland, and even oily in manner—this, apparently, in opposition to his real character, was perhaps adopted as a mere mode for inducing belief in his mildness and consideration. His chief weakness was a desire to be considered energetic, and in all harm or mischievous savagedom he certainly was so; though all the good done in his Province was done by others, he took care to claim credit for it."

These extracts will be sufficient to give the reader an idea of the temper in which this book has been written, and it is not a temper with which many will sympathise. The story of the wrong done is the story of an officer who was tried and convicted on the charge of having caused the death of one of his servants whom he had ordered to be flogged for robbing him. The man did not die for a considerable time after the flogging, and it is argued that therefore the flogging was not the cause of death. The authorities who took up the case, and the Court-martial which tried the officer, were of a different opinion. Hinc illæ lachrymæ. The story resembles very much a story which is possibly on the records of the India-office to-day; and as the author of the book under notice says in his preface that what he narrates is not to be taken as imaginative—every detail being fact—it may be accepted that Mr. Jackson has published this work to get at the public ear regarding his own complaint against the Indian officials in question. We doubt if he will gain much redress by his method of asking for it. But there is no doubt that he writes under a strong sense of indignation, and he shows that he can wield his pen with considerable vigour and literary skill. But we would prefer to read him on a less personal topic.

FIFTY YEARS OF A SHOWMAN'S LIFE.*

It was only after years of interrogation as to the reason why he did not write an account of his life and travels that at length Mr. Hare, as he tells his readers, undertook the task. He confesses that it was not an easy task, for, as he modestly puts it, "the culture of the human mind was not very extravagantly forced upon me, and when I left home with the intention of seeing the world I had, as it were, everything to learn. In fact, the whole course of my life has been guided by the event of circumstances. However, with much persuasion I took up my pen and commenced writing my history, but soon felt as if my poor illiterate brain was not equal to the task and laid it aside; but after a brief space of time I recommenced it, and began to feel more confidence in myself, and after many interruptions, caused by my business and with much labour, I at last got it completed."

There was little necessity for this apologetic tone towards an "indulgent public," for Mr. Hare has given to that public a very amusing and interesting volume, full of adventure and good stories, told in an original and lively way. Under such circumstances literary style and finish may be dispensed with. Mr. Hare professes only to give the story of his life in his own way, and it is a pleasant enough way, although sometimes the reader may be inclined to ask himself the question, whether the author means him to believe all he tells him, or is now and then "taking a rise" out of him. Whatever may have been the educational shortcomings of Mr. Van Hare in the early years of his life he had evidently learnt something by the time he was eight years old, when he attended the York Fortnight Fair to sell a heifer for his father. He thus records the incident:—

My first customer says,—
"Now, my little man, what do you want for your heifer?"
I said "Fifteen guineas, sir."
"Is she with calf?"
I said "No?"
"Ha! if she had been with calf I would have bought her."
Second customer comes.
"What's the price of her?"
"Sixteen guineas," says I.
"Is she with calf?" said he.
"Yes," says I.
"If she had not been with calf," says he, "I would have bought her."

I began to be down upon my luck and sore in temper, when up comes number three customer.

"Now, my brave fellow," says he, "what are you asking for your heifer?"

"Oh!" says I, "you may have her for seventeen pounds, as I want to go to my breakfast."

"Is she with calf?" says he.

"How do you want her?" says I. "You can have her which way you like."

Mr. Van Hare mentions casually in his preface that there was no School Board in his youthful days from which he might have benefited; but, judging from the above story, it does not seem probable that that educational institution could have greatly advanced "self-taught" cattle-salesmen, aged eight years.

Mr. Hare, after relating the heifer incident, says:—"When I got on to nine years of age I began to feel my feet;" and he gives a very frank account of how he continued to educate himself, learning much of horses, something of cards, and a good deal of miscellaneous matters. Tired of a rural life, he went at the age of eighteen to try his fortunes in America, but did not remain long there. After a little experience as ringmaster in a circus in Canada he returned to England, where, coming in for a legacy of £3,000, he set up for a time as a seed merchant, but gambling in scrip during the railway mania he lost this, and became a potato merchant, then a speculator in hams, and then—for a time—a clerk in the Audit Office, Somerset House. The work at that temple of industry has never been considered excessive; it certainly was not so in Mr. Van Hare's time. "We did not do overmuch; we got to the office generally at about ten minutes past 10 A.M.; we had a long chat telling each other's over-night's frolics, looking over the Times, &c., while at half-past eleven we began to prepare for work, which preparation generally took some considerable time; we went on till about half-past twelve, when it was then getting on to lunch time, and we began to prepare. Eat and chat till about 2 P.M. A little more work; about 3.30 P.M. begin to prepare for leaving; wash, brush-up, and say where we are going to spend the evening; listening for four o'clock—it strikes; out of the office we go before it has finished striking. The same routine day after day."

But this was not the kind of life to suit a restless nature longing for novelty and adventure. Mr. Van Hare made up his mind to go into the show business again, and did so thoroughly. He records adventures in this line many and curious. Sometimes he made a good deal of money, and often lost a good deal, but failure never disheartened him, or damped his enterprise. As a change from the show business, he tried his hand for awhile at gorilla hunting in Africa, visited the Fan country, where he was honoured by a State reception by the King and his two Queens, "who appeared in their original covering—that is, as naked as any of their tribe." The King presented him to his Royal Majesty Injidigadaya, the King of the Cannibals, who appears to have been a very amiable person, as may be judged from the following:—

"The cannibal King being wishful to show the usual generosity of all African tribes, he sent me a young woman for a wife, to cook and attend upon me, and do anything I required; but his generosity knew no bounds, for having sent me the cook, he naturally thought I must have something for her to cook, so he sent me a fine young slave as fat as a capon to kill when I required him. I should find him young and tender." Although his Majesty had sent the slave bound and pinioned, "as if he was meant to be roasted whole like a fowl," he accepted Mr. Van Hare's excuses for not eating him, the King of the Fans explaining that Mr. H. did not need either the cook or the slave, as he was well supplied with everything.

"The King replied, 'That was well. But he thought that white man was very fond of slave to eat. What for they come across the big water to buy them but to eat? If I did not want them I could send them back. But he thought if I did not want a cook I might keep her for my wife. It was good.' And that ended the palaver on the subject."

The cook backed up her Sovereign in his suggestion, and told Mr. Hare that she thought he had better keep her, for she was sure she could make him "very comfortable." But the King of the Cannibals had a higher honour in store for his illustrious visitor. This was nothing less than the offer to him of his marriageable daughter who had just made her entry into society. "That staggered me completely," says Mr. Hare. "I did not know how to answer, for it was a very delicate affair. If I answered abruptly 'No,' it might be taken as an insult, and I might be kept a prisoner, or, perhaps, eaten." The Princess was not without accomplishments. She could dance the cancan," but on her début she had had her teeth filed—"sharpened," in fact, like other cannibal adults—to facilitate the mastication of human flesh. She had fallen in love with Mr. Van Hare, but it is awkward to have a wife who can eat you as well as love you. Mr. Hare's position was indeed a delicate one. "I became," he writes, "the admiration of all beholders; but I was no happier, for I was playing a very high game, and felt most anxious to get out of the country as soon as convenient." This he managed at length to do by the tact with which he worked upon the cupidity of the King, who allowed him to go, under the belief that he would return after settling his private affairs in England to develop the trade of the cannibal country. But the parting was a sad business. The cannibals had taken a great liking to Mr. Van Hare, and were very much disappointed at his going to leave them:—

"I could not reciprocate their feelings, but told them I should come back amongst them the following year, when I should be happy to see them all again. The King tried to persuade me to remain with him, and said he would find plenty of hunting, which he thought I must be very fond of, having come so far across the big water, he did not know where, on purpose to hunt; the white men must be an extraordinary tribe. I told him when I came back I would stay and live with him; the Princess fretted very much, and I presented her Royal Highness with the very last pocket-handkerchief I had left to dry up her tears and make herself happy till my return. I distributed numerous little presents to all from whom I had received any kindness. After much shaking of hands, &c., I took leave of his Majesty and his two queens, and mustered up courage to kiss the Princess, and she, poor, dear creature, cried as if her heart would break. I put on a little hypocrisy, and struggled hard to shed a tear, but it was no use, and what was more unfortunate, I had not a handkerchief to pretend to dry away my tears."

We must here also part with Mr. Van Hare, but we may safely commend his book to all readers who are interested in truthful records of adventures modestly told.

INDIAN LIFE, RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL.*

Professor Campbell Oman writes well and sensibly. And he has made good use of those powers and habits of observation which, of course, should belong to a professor of natural science. Having seen a great deal of India, from the mountains to the plains, and having resided in each of the Provinces of Northern India, from Assam to the Punjab, he has done his best, as he says in his modest preface, to understand the character and intellectual condition of the people. The result has been the production of a very interesting work, notwithstanding that there is a little "padding" in it, or, rather, a repetition of some things of fact and fancy which will not strike all Anglo-Indian readers as new. But these need not be held to be blemishes in a book containing so much that is new to the general reader, and which should be instructive to those who really care to learn a little about the inner life of the peoples of India. Professor Oman did not find throughout the districts he sojourned in that the multitudes of India were absorbed in the contemplation of the political questions brought forward by the National Congress, and on the immediate solution of which, according to Messrs. Hume, Bradlaugh, and others, the very life and well-being of India depends. He did not find amongst the villages and towns with which he was familiar those aspirations for representative government which the literature of the Congress has told the people of England are being fondly cherished in every Native bosom. The 250,000 millions of India know little of what their representatives in Congress have been doing for them; and it is to be feared that they are ignorant of even the name of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, and, consequently, have not been moved, as Mr. Gladstone declares they are, by the insult offered to him by Lord Salisbury. Deplorable as this state of things must be to the "agitating" friends of India, it has not yet had a very disastrous effect upon the humble Natives themselves. Mr. Oman found them to be still a "simple folk," clinging to old homely ways, to old virtues, perhaps to old vices too, and to old traditions and superstitions. Some very charming reading will be found by those who choose to follow Professor Oman in his wanderings amongst the people in their everyday life of toil and holiday, of fatalism, and even fanaticism. They will not discover the India of the travelling M.P. or of the Congress agitator, but they will find an India that is still o d, strange, and full of marvel—the same India of song and story as told centuries ago.

Professor Oman has given to his readers a very delightful book.

A NINE MEN'S MORRICE.†

This is merely a reproduction of tales which have already appeared in type, and which having "done duty" might have been allowed to remain where they were first placed. The author, however, is evidently of a different opinion, for he has gathered his stray brain offsprings together, and with a dedication of the volume to Lord Lytton, he offers them again for public favour. The stories are smart, crisp, and cynical; and one or two of them we can well imagine must have charmed the charming cynic to whom they are now dedicated when they first appeared. But that was very long ago. The spiritualists and students of Psychical Research are made much fun of, but the "excellent fooling" has been done over and over again, and the laugh now comes late. But Mr. Pollock writes well, and the stories are undoubtedly clever.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.‡

We confess to a feeling of disappointment from the perusal of this book. We expected to have found in it some glimpses of the life of the gifted authoress which had hitherto not been shown to the world, but our expectations have been sadly marred. The book is mere padding, composed of details concerning the family of the Barretts, which were at the disposal of any bookmaker, and commonplace criticisms of Mr. Ingram himself on Mrs. Browning's poetry. If it be true, as has been rumoured, that the book has been published without the sanction or assistance of Mr. Browning, and rather against his wish than otherwise, criticism might be more severe. A really authentic life of the departed singer—one of the most gifted amongst poets—would be a delight to all scholars—but for this we have still to wait.

THE INDIAN EASEMENTS ACT.*

Mr. Griffiths has already given some valuable contributions to legal literature in his "Institutes of Equity," "The Law relating to Joint Stock Companies," &c.; and his treatise on "The legal principles of Sanitation and the legal methods of enforcing them" may be read to advantage by those interested in sanitary questions outside of the legal profession. The present work is one intended to smooth the difficulties of Indian law students in mastering comprehensively the rules laid down in the Indian Easements Act of 1882, the framer of which is highly praised by Mr. Griffiths for the care and completeness of his work; but, as he says:—"The very perfection of the Act as a work of art increases the student's difficulty in understanding it without explanation, and the practitioner's danger in relying upon its general words without considering the various cases whose principles have been abstracted and consolidated in the rules."

Mr. Griffiths has come forward to supply the wants of both of these classes by adding Commentaries to such Rules as seem to require elucidation. He has done his work thoroughly and exhaustively, and cites numerous cases which will help student and practitioner considerably.

The current number of the National Review (W. H. Allen and Co.) is well varied in its contents, and is certainly not so heavy as some of its immediate predecessors were. But we fear that it will take many more arguments than those brought forward in the present number to convince a Philistine generation that Scotland is really at heart Tory in its politics, and that "Scotch Conservatism" is "not an exotic but a plant of native growth, only awaiting a spell of favourable weather to spread and flourish." This paper on "Scotch Conservatism," although the place of honour is assigned to it, will possibly be quickly passed over for others of lighter calibre, such as Captain Verner's personal reminiscences of the late Crown Prince Rudolph, and Mr. A. G. Broadley's capital article on the "Negro Tenants of the Southern States," which is amusing and instructive. Some Elegant verses in English and Latin, with the easily recognised initials "H. C. R.," touch (with scorn) the classic origin of Monte Carlo as compared with its present existence; and Mr. E. Brodie Hoare, M.P., contributes a dialogue for and against Bi-metallism, from which, for the benefit of our Anglo-Indian readers, we extract the following:—

"C.—What about India? You can hardly deny that the fall in the exchange is a great loss to India.

"A.—I do not believe that the exchange, i.e., the ratio silver bears to gold, would be permanently affected by the option of bi-metallism, and I do deny that the fall in the exchange is a great loss to India.

"C.—What do you mean? I thought that the fact was notorious. I know a friend of mine who holds rupee paper has lost heavily, and others have great difficulty in making both ends meet while their families are at home. Besides, look at the Government finances.

"A.—All true as Gospel; but, with the utmost respect and sympathy for your friends and the Indian Government, they are not the people of India. The Indian Government does suffer because they have to pay heavy charges in gold, and receive their revenue in silver. The Indian official who has to maintain his children in England suffers from the same cause, because he is paid his salary in rupees and they have to pay their expenses in sovereigns. So does the man who lives in England and has money invested in India, and receives his interest in silver. If he lives in India and spends his income there he does not suffer. The rupee buys as much in India as it ever did.

'The export trade from India to this country is encouraged by the fall in the exchange. India produces more wheat now than she ever did or could have done, profitably, if silver had not fallen in value; and you must remember that increased production means increased wealth to the producing country. Of course there are other causes concurrently at work, but the fall in silver is a potent one. The English merchant still manages to make a profit out of the shipments to India. Trade is barter, and he sends out cotton goods, and gets wheat and other produce home, the balance only being settled by shipment of bullion. Bi-metallism would derange this natural course of trade for the benefit of a class. In these democratic days we have to consider the masses, even though they be dark—I must not say black.

"C.—Nevertheless, there is one class I do wish to benefit, and that is the British farmer; and, if the present system of currency encourages the import of wheat from India, I am very much tempted to go in for a change; for if we can reduce the import of foreign wheat we must give the farmers a better chance."

We do not appear get much "forrader" in the question even with the assistance of Mr. Brodie Hoare.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Review (W. H. Allen and Co.) for March is an excellent number, whether one judges from the variety of the contents or the quality of the articles. The editor contributes another of his very interesting historic sketches from the Russian, the subject of the present sketch being the celebrated Paskiévitch, whose warlike countenance is given as the frontispiece to the memoir. Admiral Winnington Ingram continues his "Ride in Asia Minor," Major Lawson, R.E., gives his experiences of the Nile Expedition of 1884-5, and there are other papers (all well illustrated) which will be interesting to Service readers. To Anglo-Indians of the military branch, the most attractive paper, however, will be that which deals with the important question of "Our Indian Horse Supply," which is discussed by W. A. Kerr, V.C., late Southern Mahratta Horse, with much thoroughness, thought, and knowledge. It is an article which ought to attract the attention of the authorities, and would well repay circulation in a separate form.

Colburn's United Service Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) does not belie it well-won prestige in its March issue, for it gives its readers some excellent papers. The "Arming of Field Artillery," by Captain R. J. Johnson, contains opinions which possibly may give rise to some discussion, as also the anonymous paper on "The Increasing Dearth of Volunteer Officers." And Colonel Parnell's able article on "Military Officers and the Press" may not be accepted by all without some demur. But friendly discussions on questions affecting the interests of the Service do good to the Services in general, and, we might add, to the magazine in particular. "H. G. K." always writes well, and it is pleasant to meet him on whatever literary path he saunters; but, if it be not "flat blasphemy," may we ask what concern has Mrs. Siddons and Lady Macbeth between the covers of a Service magazine?

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT
TO
ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL

LONDON, JUNE 24, 1889.

Sir Lepel Griffin on "The Native Princes of India and their Relations with the British Government."

THE following is the full text of the Paper on the above subject read by Sir LEPEL GRIFFIN, K.C.S.I., at the Meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute, held at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Métropole, on Tuesday Evening, June 18. The Right Hon. Lord BRASSEY, K.C.B., in the chair.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—

When I was requested by the Council of this great Institute to read a paper before them, I was in some doubt as to what subject to select, for my official experience has mostly been drawn from regions remote from those which are ordinarily associated with Colonial interests. Yet the distinction between Colonies and dependencies of the British Crown is but a superficial one. Many of the Colonies, like Canada and the Cape, have been founded and established after much hard fighting, in precisely the same manner as the Indian Empire was formed; and if it be objected that India is not a Colony, in the sense of being a permanent home of the English race, I would reply that a wise statesmanship might make our position far more secure in India by giving it less the character of a military occupation, and attracting, as I will show to be feasible, a large resident population of English colonists. It is not inappropriate to remark that this very day on which I speak to you, on which seventy-four years ago Waterloo was fought, was the last scene of a tragedy in which India and the Colonies had been for many years intimately and equally interested. It marked the downfall of the Indian ambitions of France, as distinctly as it sounded the knell of her Colonial Empire, and the surrender of both East and West into the victorious hands of England.

When I consented to read a paper on the Native princes of India and their relations with the British Government, the subject seemed to me so familiar as to require little consideration; but when I came to place my ideas on paper, I found that it covered so large an area, and the amount of information at my disposal was so great, that I recognised that I could only, in the short space of time at your and my disposal, give you, who, I presume, are mostly unacquainted with India, a few leading ideas on the position and character of the Native princes. I have, perhaps, as intimate a knowledge of them as any Englishman can hope to obtain. Many years ago I was employed by the Government of the day to write the histories of the Punjab Rajas and chiefs, which occupation, extending over several years, brought me into the closest association with every prince and noble in Northern India. Subsequently, as Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, I had for many years the control of the political relations of the Government with these princes. Since then, my official relations have been with the chiefs of the South, in Central India—Rajputs, Mahrattas, and Mahammadans, and if I have not been connected with the great Mahammadan State of Hyderabad, it is merely that I was compelled, for private reasons, to decline Lord Dufferin's kind invitation to take up that most important and interesting appointment. Under the orders of the Government, I have placed on their throne many of the most distinguished Indian princes, both in Northern and Central India; from the Amir of Afghanistan and the Maharajas Sindhia and Holkar, down to Rajput princelets, whose pride makes them consider themselves the equals of the mightiest rulers.

Those who would obtain a clear and comprehensive survey of the Native States, with their history and statistics, will find it in the admirable work of my distinguished friend, Colonel Malleson. But my aim to-night is more general than statistical. I would first observe that the Indian princes are an enduring record of the generosity and wise policy which have dictated English administration in the East. Some of them were our friends and allies in our wars; others are the representatives of the foes whom we overcame, and whose possessions and rank were confirmed to them under more favourable conditions and better guarantees for permanence than they enjoyed previous to their fortunate conflict with ourselves.

The popular idea of Native India is a collection of States of enormous antiquity, the chiefs of which are fretting under unsympathetic English domination and are eager to reconquer the independence which they had enjoyed from immemorial ages. Nothing can be further from the truth. In India of to-day, the more important States politically, such as Hyderabad, Baroda, Gwalior, Bhopal, Indore, the powerful Sikh States on the Sutlej, and Kashmir, are more modern than the British power. They all rose on the ruins of the great Moghul empire, which has disappeared like a dream, leaving no disappointed and ambitious heirs to renew the struggle for the crown. There are, it is true, many ancient principalities in Hindostan, but in these no danger to English supremacy is to be found. The unquiet spirits, the seditious intriguers, the turbulent adventurers are to be found in the new and modern principalities which have no traditions of loyalty, which were born amidst rapine and blood, and are jealous of the British power as a successful rival who snatched from them the prize of empire which they flattered themselves they had themselves won. Northern India was at one time probably covered, from the Himalayas to the Nerbudda, by Rajput principalities. The Rajputs, you must understand, are a noble race and caste, from which ancient India was accustomed to draw her military and ruling class. As successive waves of invasion poured through the Khyber passes on the Punjab and the North-West Provinces of India, the Rajput princes were driven by the advancing tide to the right hand and to the left, where they are still to be found in two well-recognised groups; one inhabiting a large portion of Central India and Rajputana, the other driven into the quiet Himalayan valleys, where, undisturbed by war or revolution, they have peacefully ruled a docile people for thousands of years.

Many of the Rajput dynasties were old at the time when the Greeks were launching their swift ships for Troy. I remember, in the beautiful Chamba Valley, in the heart of the Himalayas, when examining, in one of the temples, the family records, the high priest unrolled before me a scroll which contained the names of the house of Chamba from its foundation, and it extended across the temple, down the steps, and across the courtyard, and I counted 673 rulers in direct line of this ancient house. Even if we allow only ten years to each reign, this record, true or apocryphal, would take us, according to orthodox chronology, into the Garden of Eden with Adam and Eve, who were undoubtedly Rajputs. In any case, many of these families trace their origin and derive their names from the moon and the sun, and it is impossible to claim a more illustrious ancestry.

Most of the Rajput Himalayan States are politically insignificant, but they are all well disposed and interesting to an extreme degree. In Rajputana and Central India the ancient Rajput principalities are far more powerful and important, and several of them, such as Udipur, Jeypore, Jodhpur, and Rewa, take a very high rank in the social and political hierarchy. All, I may say, without exception, are sincerely attached to the British Government. No shadow of disloyalty attaches at this moment, to my knowledge, to a single Rajpu State. We save those in the Himalayas from being overrun and crushed by the Sikhs and the Ghurkhas; in Rajputana we rescued them from destruction at the hands of the Mahrattas, who were resistlessly sweeping over the peninsula, leaving ruin behind them.

Another important group of princes comprises the Sikh States on the Sutlej, as Patiala, Nabha, Jhind, Kaparthalla, and Faridkhot. With these the British Government is on the best of terms. We have never had any quarrel with them, but, on the contrary, from the early days of the century, protected them consistently against the ambition of the powerful Sikh monarchy founded by Ranjit Singh at Lahore. All these States, now rich and independent, are perfectly aware that they only exist through the generous protection, through the greater part of the century, of the British Government. In the first Sikh war, when their fidelity was exposed to an extreme trial, only one, Nabha, wavered, and was punished by a large confiscation of territory. Since that time, Nabha, with the other States, has amply proved its devotion, and it is not too much to say that the loyalty, gallantry, and steadiness of the Sikh chiefs in the Mutiny, ensured the capture of Delhi and the retention of the Punjab in English hands. They have stood by us in good report and evil report; their contingents fought and served side by side with British regiments in the last Afghan campaign, and I am perfectly convinced that, should the time come when England has, on the north-west frontier, to fight against a more formidable foe than she has yet met in India, the Sikh States will eagerly send to the front thousands of magnificent soldiers, who I believe, after having seen both, to be superior in intelligence and physique to the European troops who would be brought against them.

The third important group of princes are the Mahratta confederacy, now represented by the great States of Gwalior, Indore, and Baroda. The two former of these have been under my political charge for many years, and, if time permit, I may again refer to them. The Mahrattas were a wild, predatory race who rose to power in the last century, when the Mahammadan Empire was falling to pieces, and their chiefs, men of low caste, who had, in troublous times, developed some military genius, were probably no better or worse than other brigand leaders who have founded families in Europe or Asia. Their ravages, followed by those of the savage Pindaris, who were their allies, and who followed on their tracks, as the jackal follows the lion, left Central India and a large part of Rajputana a desert; and fifty years of peace, under the firm rule of England have not sufficed to restore its prosperity. My intimate knowledge of the Mahratta States does not lead me to the belief that, till within the last two years, when a change of rulers in Indore and Gwalior has allowed the more direct interference of the British Government, much improvement of their methods has taken place since the time when they triumphantly pillaged India. In no part of the continent, except perhaps Kashmir, has the peasant been more ruthlessly oppressed and overtaxed than under the administration of the late Maharajas Sindhia and Holkar.

The last group of Native States sufficiently important to demand consideration is the Mahammadan, of which may be taken as examples the premier State in India, Hyderabad in the Deccan; Bahawalpur in the Punjab, and Bhopal in Central India. There is no reason to doubt the loyalty of any of these princes, the most important of whom was merely a lieutenant-Governor of the Moghul Empire, and exercised no independent authority whatever until the downfall of that dynasty. At the same time, the natural intelligence of the Mahammadans, and the living force of the creed of Islam, and their dominant position in so many parts of the world, cause in Mahammadan states and cities a far larger amount of excitement and political intrigue than elsewhere. This need be no subject of disquietude to a courageous and wise Government, who not only recognises a traitor when it sees him, but is not afraid to punish him. The only danger to the permanence of British rule in India is the foolish and cowardly tolerance of treason.

One of the chief causes of the troubles of Hyderabad, financial scandals connected with which have lately attracted much interest in this country, is due to the fact that our treaties with that state do not prohibit, as elsewhere, the employment of Europeans; the result is, that it is overrun with European adventurers of an especially bad type, whose intrigues it is difficult to counteract, and who have no other thought than of the spoil which they can extort from the Nizam and his ministers. The shameless manner in which Hyderabad and its mining concessions were thrown into the English money market the year before last will be fresh in your memmory, and a careful study of that case would somewhat enlighten students as to Oriental and European methods of financial operations; but it would not tell them the whole story, nor reveal the absolute and normal corruption of officials in a Native State where honesty is practically unknown; and if a person innocent of Oriental intrigue were to believe that the Minister, Abdul Huq, who was convicted of corruption in the matter of the mining concession, and who was made the scapegoat for other more important personages, was the most guilty, he would be much mistaken. The chief culprit stood much nearer the throne of the Nizam.

The most interesting of all the Indian principalities, from the point of view of the Royal Colonial Institute, is Kashmir, for here alone, within the temperate zone of the Himalayas, is an extensive region, fertile in soil and salubrious in climate, where Englishmen might settle in such large numbers as to found a military and industrial colony of the utmost importance to the Empire. It is true that there are other petty States among the lower Himalayas and on their southern slopes where a suitable climate for Europeans exists, but in none of them is there sufficient land for occupation or profitable cultivation. In Kashmir alone, the garden of Asia, a beautiful valley, many thousand feet above the sea level, abounding with lakes, rivers, and streams, and surrounded on all sides by lofty and snow-covered mountains, there lies a veritable paradise, which is not more beautiful in the glowing descriptions of poets than it is in reality. Kashmir is one of the few places in the world which justify the praises which have been lavished upon them. All fruits and grains of temperate climates grow in its rich soil, and for some of the most valuable productions, such as wine, silk, tea, cinchona, and hops, it is peculiarly suited. Its inhabitants are intelligent and industrious workmen, and their skill in the manufacture of carpets, shawls, silver, and lacquer work is well known to the western world.

The practical question regarding Kashmir is whether it is possible to so encourage English immigration as to establish an English colony so numerous as to largely add to our defensive strength. I believe that such a measure, which would do more to secure the north-west frontier than any possible series of fortifications in Afghanistan and Biluchistan, is perfectly practicable, and only requires to be taken up by the Home and Indian Governments with vigour and determination to be successful. The Government has, it appears to me, during the last thirty years since the great Indian Mutiny, been strangely unmindful of its duty of encouraging the British colonisation of the mountain districts of India. The old East India Company, in the true spirit of monopolists, discouraged English settlement, and the most respectable colonist was liable to be deported as an adventurer. Then came the Mutiny, which was to India what the Revolution was to France, and, in spite of the unfortunate incidents that accompanied it, proved the most fortunate thing for India and its Government. It was a shock which woke the country from the sleep of ages, and placed it within the family circle of civilised nations. The policy of the Government has necessarily changed, and English settlement and English capital are recognised as valuable, and, indeed, essential to the development of the country; but the old tradition of timidity and apathy hangs heavy over the Government, and the European merchant and capitalist, who alone are able to renovate the country and fill its exhausted treasuries, are still regarded with ill-concealed dislike and suspicion. When the Government has realised that the true barrier of India against Russian aggression is in a colony of three millions of Englishmen, liable to military duty, and settled in Kashmir and on the slopes of the Himalayas, we shall see them encourage English immigration to Kashmir with as much zeal as is now shown in excluding visitors from this Himalayan paradise. There are no difficulties of any importance; the chief of such as exist are a fear lest a quasi-British occupation of Kashmir might shake the steadiness and rouse the alarm of the princes of India; and, secondly, the supposed difficulty of providing for the existing occupiers of the land. With regard to the latter point, it is sufficient to say that the matter would speedily right itself if Europeans were freely permitted to purchase land, and the Kashmir Government was directed to sell it under the arbitration and assessment of a board composed of English and Kashmir officials, the arrangements would be simple.

The peasants have no rights in the soil, but are mere tenants at will, and every acre of the land belongs to the Maharaja; and the people, when employed by English landholders, would be infinitely happier and more prosperous than at present, while the soil, properly cultivated and with capital expended on it, would produce threefold its present crops. As to the opposition of the Maharaja, the Government need have no concern. He is little more than an imbecile; a slave to the vilest passions, and entirely in the hands of the most degraded of his servants, who practise on his superstitious fears. He was never fit to ascend the throne, and his conduct there has been so contemptible that he has been practically set aside, and affairs are conducted by a council, which is dominated by the British Resident. I knew the father of the present Maharaja well, and he had often spoken to me of the hopeless and degraded character of his son, and how he foresaw that the kingdom which had been won by the grandfather would be lost by the grandson; for Cashmir, as a Dogra Rajput kingdom, is of yesterday, and its first Maharaja, Gulab Singh, was a man who had risen from a menial office about the person of the great Sikh Maharaja Ranjit Singh. When the first Sikh War arrived, it found Gulab Singh a titular Raja and, administering the Cashmir province for the Sikhs. The Governor-General of those days sold the province to Gulab Singh as a reward for abstaining from joining the Sikh army at Sobraon. Gulab Singh kept his word; abandoned his masters, who were crushed on the Sutlej, and paid us the million which was asked as the price of the province by robbing the Sikh treasury in the Lahore Fort. Maharaja Gulab Singh was an unscrupulous blood-thirsty tyrant, but he kept his word to us, and maintained his friendship during his lifetime, and helped us materially during the Mutiny. His son, the second Maharaja, was, in outward bearing, the most picturesque and noble specimen of a Rajput prince to be seen in India; exceedingly handsome and splendidly dressed, his manners had a distinction which is rarely seen in Europe; but he was a bad and careless ruler, and his people were ground down by exactions as cruel as those which the Jews endured from the Egyptians in Egypt, or which are practised in twenty Native states to-day. The third Maharaja is a drunken debauchee, and the line which was founded in treachery and blood may well die out after as infamous a record as that of the Borgias in Italy. There have been many persons with no exact knowledge of the history of the time, who have blamed the Government for not holding Cashmir at the close of the first Sikh War. This was impossible: the Punjab was not annexed till three years later, and the Government had no reason to confiscate an outlying province in no way attached to their own possessions; besides, they knew little or nothing of its capabilities and future value; and the question of scientific frontiers and strategical positions had not then arisen to vex the minds of Indian Chancellors of the Exchequer.

Moreover, there is no reason to doubt that the sale of Cashmir to Gulab Singh for his desertion of his Sikh masters was a brilliant stroke of policy, which is to be praised and not blamed, for the struggle on the Sutlej was so severe, and the result at times so doubtful, that had Gulab Singh joined the Sikhs on that day, the wave of British dominion might have been beaten back for years. I mention these points to show that there is nothing in the past history of Kashmir, so long as it has been owned by the present dynasty, which entitles it to be treated by the British with any special tenderness or consideration. Nor would the Native princes of India be at all alarmed by the British colonisation of Kashmir; they would understand that the position is exceptional; that Kashmir is the only large State in India in which Europeans can healthily live and bring up their families, and that its strategical position on the North-West frontier makes it not only reasonable, but an imperative duty for the Government to utilise it as it chooses in the best interests of the public safety.

Another State on which I would say a few words is Afghanistan. If it be objected that the Amir of Afghanistan cannot correctly be included among the princes of India, I would reply that the real Indian Empire stretches, under whatever name you may choose to call it, from the confines of China and Tonquin to the frontier of Persia. Some nations are very fond of hoisting their flag on every unoccupied portion of the earth's surface, while British officers, with more modesty, are often inclined to keep the Union Jack in their pockets. But to those who are acquainted with contemporary history, Biluchistan, with its democratic organisations and its varied and opposing clans, will appear as subject to the Queen's dominion as any part of Native India; while the Amir of Afghanistan is as truly a British feudatory as the Nizam of Hyderabad or the Maharaja Sindhia of Gwalior. He receives a fixed subsidy from the Indian Government, and he has engaged, in consideration of our promise of assistance and protection, to regulate his foreign relations in accordance with our instructions, which is practically all that we require from the feudatory Indian princes. The more important among the latter are quite as independent in their domestic policy and rule, in many cases quite as severely, without the same excuse, as the Amir of Afghanistan.

The Amir Abdur Rahman has somewhat rough manners and treats the Indian Foreign Office with occasional rudeness, is the fault of that Department, which has not retained sufficient of the imperious spirit of Lord Dalhousie. The Amir is the creation of the British Government, and it is as unreasonable for them to allow him to treat them with the coolness which has been too much in fashion, as for the pots to be encouraged to cry out against the potter. The Amir of Kabul may, with perfect correctness, be styled the first of the feudatory princes of India; he is no more than this, and it is well that the world, and especially Russia, should remember it. The engagements by which he is bound to us and we to him were negotiated by myself in 1881, before I placed him, by the orders of the Government of India, on the throne of Kabul. Abdur Rahman was most anxious that a forma treaty, recording his obligations and duties and the kind and amount of assistance which, under certain circumstances, he was to receive, should be drawn up, and this proposal, which he constantly pressed upon me, I was disposed to support, for I considered that he was strong enough to hold his own, and that a treaty would bind him to us more closely, and would more distinctly warn off trespassers on Afghan soil; while if it were torn up, in consequence of his failure to establish his government, it would be in no worse case than other famous treaties which Western nations have been more occupied in tearing up than in preserving. But Lord Ripon's Government declined to allow a formal treaty to be executed until they were assured of the Amir's strength, and the letters which I gave to him on the part of the Viceroy are still in force and regulate his position, and further engage us absolutely to defend him against Russian attack on condition of his following our advice and directions in his foreign policy. It is well that Englishmen should generally understand, on the authority of the person who was entrusted with the negotiations, that England is as much bound in honour to defend Herat, Maimena, Balkh, or any other portion of Afghanistan, against Russia as she is to defend the Isle of Wight against France. Viewed in this light, the defences of the North-West frontier in the neighbourhood of Quetta, which have been most wisely carried out by Lord Dufferin and his military advisers, appear hardly adequate. What is further required is the extension of the railway, first to Kandahar and then to Herat; a scheme which the Amir might probably be induced to support. It can, however, only be constructed as a strategic line under a Government guarantee, which the Indian Exchequer, in these days of low exchange, is unable to afford. At the same time, a couple of millions now spent on this line may save the Empire a hundred millions later on.

While speaking of frontier defences, I would incidentally remark that Sir Charles Dilke's articles in The Fortnightly Review, on this subject, appear to me to exaggerate the strategic completeness of the Quetta position. There is still a very important gate of India, which is neither barred nor locked. This is the Ghumal route, commonly known as the Ghwalari. It passes through the country of the Mahsud Waziris, and is, next to the Bolan, the most important pass, or series of passes, on the North-West frontier, between Hindustan and the Afghan city of Ghazni. It is the chief route used by the Powinda traders, who yearly come from Afghanistan with their camels to India; and beyond the ranges of the British frontier the passes open into an exceedingly easy country, where an army marching by the Hindu Khush, Bamian, Kabul, and Ghazni would meet no difficulties of importance, and from which India might be attacked without going near the almost impregnable position of Quetta. Until the proposals of Sir Robert Sandeman, Agent to the Governor-General for Biluchistan, with reference to the settlement of this country and the defence of the passes are accepted, there will remain a serious breach in our defences, which at some time may give us incalculable trouble.

South of Afghanistan comes Biluchistan, over which Sir Robert Sandeman, with admirable tact and energy, has for long exercised political control. The chief of these feudatory princes is the Khan of Khelat, who, owing to the democratic constitution of Biluchistan, is not of any great importance. He and his people have, however, made considerable advances in civilisation during the past few years. When Lord Lytton assembled the feudatories of the Crown at Delhi, in 1877, on the occasion of the assumption by Her Majesty the Queen of the Imperial title, the Khan of Khelat attracted as much attention as anyone. His picturesque and long-haired followers were then literally savages, and I remember them contentedly feasting on the scented soap which had been supplied in the lavatories of their special train on the road to Delhi. Perhaps ere this they have discovered that civilisation has intended soap for other uses than of food. They certainly had not done so in those days.

Gwalior is by far the most important of the Mahratta States, and its capital is historically and archæologically a highly interesting place. Three years ago I had the satisfaction of making over to Maharaja Sindhia the great rock fortress of Gwalior, which had been held since the mutiny by English troops, and which Lord Dufferin had wisely determined might be safely surrendered to its rightful master. Sindhia did not live long enough to pay a single visit to his recovered fortress, and his death removed one of the most remarkable and powerful chiefs in India, and the only one who possessed conspicuous military ability. But under English supremacy and in peaceful days there was no place for a man like Sindhia, who required for his development a period of war and anarchy, when he doubtless would have made a great name as a military leader. As a ruler he was as bad as it was possible to be. After his death it became my duty to reorganise his adminstration, and no one of this audience could conceive the hideous disorder and neglect which prevailed, and the entire absence of all the most elementary aids to civilisation, such as schools, hospitals, or public buildings. The Maharaja treated his subjects worse than cattle; and although I found several millions sterling hoarded in his palaces, the officials, police, and soldiery were so badly paid that they were allowed and even encouraged to rob the peasants, while in the case of the highest officials, such as Governors of districts, the Maharaja is understood to have taken his share of the spoil.

The son and successor of Sindhia is a bright, intelligent, and most charming boy of twelve, who is being carefully trained; but I regret to see in the last Indian telegrams that his immediate marriage is being discussed. I trust that the Government of India will peremptorily forbid this foolish proceeding, which Native ministers and servants always favour for their own interested purposes. If the Government tolerate it, they will be responsible for the fatal results which will inevitably follow to their most illustrious ward. It was a great misfortune for the Gwalior State that its minister, Raja Sir Ganpat Rao, who worked loyally with me to reform the administration, and who in two years had absolutely transformed the State into the most progressive community in India, should have suddenly died, as Indian reformers, obnoxious to their conservative opponents, too frequently do. He has been succeeded by an illiterate and thoroughly incompetent person, whom the Government will soon find it necessary to set aside, when the progress of Gwalior, now hampered and interrupted, may again rapidly proceed.

If you were to ask me to express in a few sentences the virtues and advantages of Native States contrasted with their vices and failings, I would observe, in the first place, that they are picturesque. Their brightness and colour; the tawdry splendour of their courts; the unimaginable inefficiency of their soldiery; their grotesque travesty of justice and administration, make a grateful change from the sober, dull monotony of British rule. The princes, with a few exceptions, are loyal, for the reason that they have nothing of which to complain. During the Mutiny they learned the lesson that loyalty was highly rewarded, and that treason was relentlessly punished, and they will not forget it. They also appreciate the fact that under no foreign power would they be as well off as under England; and that were France or Russia mistress of India they would have to surrender half their revenues to the paramount Power. The rulers of the most important States further realise that they have, personally, no hold on the country, and are far more distasteful and alien to the people they rule than are the English. Hyderabad and Bhopal, Mahammadan families, tyrannising over Hindoo peasants; the Maharaja of Kashmir, a Hindu prince grinding Mahammadans to the dust; Sindhia and Holkar, detested by the Rajput gentry they have overwhelmed and whom they still daily persecute—all these would vanish from the map of Hindostan if England but raised her hand. Princes and their subjects acknowledge this so fully that, in the eyes of the people, we are responsible for the misgovernment of the chiefs. This sentiment I found everywhere prevailing in Native States, from the enlightened prime minister, unable to control the sensual tyrant he calls his master, down to the tortured and over-taxed peasant.

This popular and correct belief in our responsibility for bad government prevents the Raja filling successfully the humble rôle of the drunken Helot which properly belongs to him, demonstrating to the people of India by his evil example how great are the blessings of security and justice which they enjoy under British rulers. For there is no reason to conceal the truth that in the vast majority of Native States the maladministration is phenomenal; tyranny and extortion are the rule, while the officials, from the highest to the lowest, are hopelessly corrupt. There exist well-governed States, as I have freely acknowledged, such as Nahan, in the Himalayas; Nabha, in the Punjab; Oorcha, in Central India, the chiefs of which are models of manly virtue. And I could name Native officials, like Raja Sir Dinkar Rao; Raja Sir Madhava Rao, Prime Minister of Baroda; Diwan Raghonath Rao, Prime Minister of Indore; Nawab Mehdi Ali, of Hyderabad; and the Khalifa brothers, of Pattiala, whose integrity and learning would do honour to any country. But they are oases in a desert of tyranny and corruption. I once brought to Indore as Chief Justice a Native gentleman of high character and culture, whom I had met as a magistrate at Agra, and who seemed inclined to adopt the platform favoured by Young India of decrying English rule and extolling the Indian capability for self-government. He joyfully arrived at Indore on double the salary he had received in a British district, and it was amusing, and at the same time pathetic, to watch the change which came over his fine theories when confronted with the grim reality. The high-handed interference of the chief with the course of justice; innocent persons ruined to gratify greedy or offended officials; the lowest menials raised to high office; the unblushing and open corruption on every side; all this so alarmed and surprised my friend that when I left India he fled to British territory, to save his honour and his liberty, which he believed, and I daresay with excellent reason, to be in imminent danger. He has since written some clever sketches of the administration of Native States, in which he has said far more severe things regarding it than will be found in this paper.

There is no particular reason that Native States should be honest and clean-handed. Injustice and oppression have come down to them by immemorial tradition. Nemo repente fuit justus, as the Saturday Review said last week, and the habit of honesty must slowly grow, like any other wholesome aptitude.

Nor do I think that the art of government is or ever has been developed in India, or indeed in any part of Asia. The elementary village community with its tenacious life and self-government implies no more capacity for the higher administrative arts than do the instinctive and respectable efforts of the beaver to organise its amphibious colony. There are certainly some great names, Akbar, Shahjehan, and Baber, in Indian history, but contemporary observers have shown us that the splendour of the Court was obtained by the misery of the people. The administration was oppressive in the extreme; taxation was overwhelming, and the state of affairs similar to that in France in the days of Louis XIV., when the poverty and despair of the peasants were preparing the downfall of this monarchy. Nor are the surroundings of the princes in infancy and youth favourable to improvement.

A passage from a paper which I wrote some time ago, showing the unhappy surroundings of young Indian princes, I will read here, as I can add nothing to it with advantage:—

> Day by day, year by year, the Government painfully, anxiously, honestly labours to influence its young chiefs for good; but the seed too often falls on stony ground or among thorns. The hereditary and transmitted qualities of Indian princes are too imperious in their impulse; uncounted generations of debauchery and self-indulgence leave but poor soil in which to plant the ascetic virtues of chastity, truth, and self-sacrifice. To their growth, the gross and material surroundings of a native Court are hostile. The eternal contest between pleasure and duty, between virtue and vice, which the old poets and painters ever loved to describe or depict, is here a campaign as easy as that of Tel-el-Kebir. Pleasure triumphs without a struggle. The young prince, surrounded by fiddlers, and parasites, and courtesans, cannot hear the voice of duty for the rhymical music of the bangles of the women, and the fantastic tingle of the Indian lute calling him to love and wine. Many of those who read this paper know, or have seen, the end. The melancholy shores of the Indian administration are strewn with the rotting hulks of our educational failures.

You will not think that I have drawn a very pleasing picture of the Native States. But it is, unfortunately, a true one; and if you doubt my accuracy I would refer you to other authorities—Sir John Malcolm in the last generation, and Sir John Strachey of to-day. There is, however, and this is the essential point, a constant though slow advance in administration and procedure due to the example and pressure of the English Government, and to the spread of education and enlightenment, which, though they affect Native India far more slowly than British territory, yet make themselves increasingly felt. Even the growing importance of the Press, by no means an unmixed benefit in a country like India, does something to temper the oppression of the Rajas. But it is the good example of British administration which must be trusted to work the most beneficial change.

To the ordinary English traveller, whether a tourist or an official from British territory, the Native States appear very picturesque and delightful places. He sees alone the splendour of the Court and the fine manners of the chief. He is delighted with the lavish hospitality, the parades, the fireworks, the shooting parties, the unaccustomed pageantry, the colour and the life. He sees the prince on his good behaviour, anxious to make an impression on the guests of whose criticism he is afraid; but he understands and knows no more of the character of the State and the feelings of its ruler than a photographer knows of a sitter when he has placed his head in a vice and exhorted him to look pleasant. But those who, like myself, have had for years to direct and control Native Courts are wont to look beyond the idle ceremonial and the glitter and the show to the dungeons where innocent men are rotting for years without a trial, to peasants tortured to extort impossible rents, to high officials in notorious league with bandits, and to corruption on every judgment seat. You must not be surprised if our sympathies are with the people rather than with the princes. Our first duty has not been to say soft things to the chiefs, and write rose-coloured reports to the Government of India, or shut our eyes to the misery that surrounds us. Our chief duty has been to stand between the tyrant and his victim, and to let the oppressed go free: and I trust that a day may come when the British Government of India will recognise, more fully than it does at present, that it has a duty as direct and imperative to the poor and weak and oppressed in Native States as to the people of its own territory, protecting them from injustice and wrong, and punishing tyrants by the deprivation of powers which they have systematically and mercilessly abused.

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENT

TO

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL

LONDON, NOVEMBER 26, 1889.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

RUSSIANS IN CENTRAL ASIA IN 1889.*

Mr. Curzon's work on Central Asia is in many ways a remarkable book. In the first place, it has succeeded to a degree beyond any volume with which we are acquainted in imparting life to the dry bones of the great controversy which lashes experts to fury—the all-important question as to the advance of the "White Czar" in lands hitherto peopled by hordes of tribes but little, if any, higher in the scale of civilisation than the barbarians of the desert—lands the denizens of which have been for countless centuries a scourge and a pest, a blot, as it were, upon the escutcheon of nature's fair creation.

Without wishing in any way to detract from Mr. Curzon's literary acumen, which has enabled him to array his facts and figures in a garb alike pleasing and attractive to the public, it may be asserted that his success is in part due to his good fortune in being the first Englishman to deal exhaustively with the newly-constructed Transcaspian Railway, destined, without doubt, to be by far the most important factor in any struggle for supremacy between the two mighty nations which may—perhaps some would assert—must some day deluge the plains of Central Asia with an ocean of blood. Whether when the time comes nature will fight for or against the legions which float the standard of the two-headed Eagle, who can say? Much depends upon the period of the year when the dogs of war are let loose. Then, again, there is the chapter of accidents. A sandstorm of abnormal severity would bury the new line, at least for a time, in a sea of ruin, and upset the calculations of the most prudent commander and the most far-sighted leader. But, however this might be, the railway, we again repeat, has completely altered the nature of the problem, and no statesman can in future afford to disregard the circumstance of its existence, or make light of the advantage to Russia which its successful completion has afforded.

It would not be possible within any space at our disposal to enter upon an examination of the chapters—the all-important chapters—which deal with the Central Asian problem as regards the two rivals for power—Russia and England. But we cannot refrain from recording a cordial agreement with Mr. Curzon as to the inexpediency, on the part of the English Government, of demanding from and accepting assurances by Russia with no more intention of observance by the latter Power than are the specious pledges of a Separatist candidate when soliciting the votes of a confiding and easily deluded constituency. A pledge between two parties, one of whom has not the remotest intention of fulfilling it, is not only useless, but positively baneful, since honesty and uprightness are thereby handicapped, while perfidy and treachery have the fullest scope, untrammelled by inconvenient scruples or embarassing qualms of conscience. That this view of the case has never commended itself to our rulers in high places—at least as regards one party in the State—is an enigma which it is difficult to comprehend, and still more hopeless to solve.

With much—well-nigh, indeed, with all—that Mr. Curzon writes in his most interesting and masterly summary we are in cordial agreement; but we venture to think he has not given due weight to the consideration that, whatever may be the outcome of the "race of nations" in the plains of Central Asia—whether an invasion of India by Russia be or be not possible—whether, as we think, these regions are destined to be the battle-field of the future; one thing—and it is a point of the utmost gravity—is evident beyond the pale of possibility or doubt, that Russia holds to the view that her advances towards the "red line" of our Indian possessions are a "sore" to be kept open and used as occasion may require, whenever and wherever the interests of the "Lion" and the "Eagle" may clash and come into collision. This is the danger of the position.

It matters not materially to Russia whether the Cossack hordes are fated to overrun the sunny plains of Hindostan provided the opportunity can be utilised of creating a scare in one part of the British Empire, so as to counteract its efforts in another quarter of the globe; and we should have been pleased had Mr. Curzon employed his knowledge of facts and his power of pen to bring more home to the many who will read his book the real purport of the extension of the Russians dominions commenced upwards of a quarter of a century ago, and if not completed—that is too to much to expect—at least consolidated by the construction of the Trans-Caspian line. He has shown that this simple act has converted outlying and sparsely-inhabited stretches of semi-waste into a homogeneous compact and nationalised area; but we want the British public to grasp clearly that the new Russian acquisitions are of priceless value should the shock of arms in Europe afford the columns of the North an opportunity of turning to account possessions which, from an aggressive point of view, are destined to open a new era in the history of the Central Asian problem.

CARDINAL LAVIGERIE AND THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.*

At the present moment, when public interest is so much directed to the "Dark Continent," a book telling of the good work done by a self-denying, courageous missionary, such as Cardinal Lavigerie, should be welcomed and eagerly perused. Unfortunately, however, we fear that most readers will lay down this book with a feeling of great disappointment. Mr. Clarke gives a very full and prolix biography of the Cardinal, but he has very little to tell us about the African slave trade which has not been told before. He quotes largely from other writers, but modestly keeps back any original opinions of his own—if he has any—upon this great subject. He has, however, opinions—and very bigoted ones, too—on religious topics, and he devotes much type and evident mental labour to the abuse of Mahommedanism. For controversial purposes an essay on "The Attitude of Mahommedanism to the Religion of Christ" might be of use to parties interested in such a discussion, but it is altogether out of place in a book which pretends to deal calmly and clearly with the question of the African slave trade as it comes to the notice of missionary or traveller. There are parts of the book, however, which contain some interesting accounts of savage manners and customs in the land which Mr. Stanley is doing so much to open up and bring into the ways of civilisation. Here is one story:—King Mwanga, who reigned at Uganda, was supposed to have become a convert to Christianity. He said the Lord's Prayer daily, and performed other pious ceremonies which much pleased the missionaries. But one day the news came that a strange white traveller was approaching his territory—the traveller being no other than the late unfortunate Bishop Hannington. The King pretended to be, or actually was, in great fear of the Bishop's coming, and proposed to have him assassinated. What happened is thus told:—

"Joseph Mkasa, a Native Christian, and one of the King's councillors, did his utmost to prove that the dreaded stranger was no enemy, and that if Mwanga did not wish him to enter his territory he need only forbid him to cross the frontier, without imbuing his hands in blood. The King promised to countermand his order, but whether the messenger was sent too late, or was not sent at all, it is impossible to say. At any rate, the poor bishop and all his men were massacred, and the Prime Minister took occasion to demand the death of Joseph Mkasa. The King consented, and the Minister ordered that Joseph should be beheaded immediately. When led to the place of execution he remained perfectly calm, and, addressing his executioner, said :—'Tell Mwanga that he has condemned me unjustly, but I forgive him with all my heart. Tell him, too, that I advise him to repent, for unless he does so he will have to answer for me before the tribunal of God.' His head was then struck off, and his body committed to the flames.

"Joseph's last message was delivered to the King. At first he pretended to laugh at it; but it evidently made a great impression on him. In his brutish anger he thought to prevent Joseph from appearing against him at the judgment-seat by killing another man, and causing the ashes of the two to be well shaken up together. 'Now,' he exclaimed in triumph, 'nobody can distinguish between them, so how can he plead against me before God?'"

The reasoning of his Majesty was approved of by his Ministers, and the result was the murder of all who professed Christianity, and the relapse to his old wicked ways of the monarch himself.

VERSES WRITTEN IN INDIA.*

Anglo-Indian readers will be glad to have, in a complete and compact form, the spirited verses which from time to time the talented Bengal Civil Servant, who was winning his way to the highest posts in the Indian Service, found leisure in the midst of laborious official duties to strike off as a sort of relaxation from graver work. It is many years ago since public attention was first called to the strength and earnestness which characterised the lay of "The Old Pindaree," a strength and earnestness which are still to be found in all that comes from Sir Alfred Lyall's pen. The verses which he has now collated and published will not be accepted as proving their author to be a born poet, but they are verses which have something very like the true poetic ring about them. The ordinary reader, who knows nothing of, or cares little about India, may find them lacking in interest for him, and even in a measure unintelligible to him; but this opinion will not detract from the charm which they will have for many others who have had an experience of life in India, and know something of the country and people. Such readers will understand the protest of the dying "Rajpoot Chief of the Old School" :—

"The English say I govern ill,
That laws must silence spear and gun,
So may my peaceful subjects till;
But peaceful subjects have I none.
I can but follow my father's rule,
I cannot learn in an English school.

"Years hence, when all the earth is calm,
And forts are level, and foes agree
Since feuds must end, to trade and farm,
And toil, like oxen, patiently;
When this my garden palace stands
A desert ruin choked with sands,
A broken well 'mid trees that fade,
Some travellers still my name may bless,
The chief long syne that left him shade
And a water spring in the wilderness."

Another poem, which will be appreciated even by those who have no knowledge of India, is that entitled "Theology in Excelsis," founded on a passage in a newspaper during the Mutiny of 1857, stating that the Mussalman rebel soldiery offered to spare the lives of any English prisoners who would consent to profess Mahommedanism by repeating the usual short formula, but that only one half-caste cared to save himself in that way. The writer of the poem gives the supposed soliloquy of an English prisoner to whom the offer is made, but who has no religious belief—one who has not that trust in the Christian faith—which has helped men to accept martyrdom willingly, but who asks himself what shall he do, not believing, when he can save himself by merely repeating a formula easy to patter?

"Life is pleasant, and friends may be nigh,
Fain would I speak one word and be spared;
Yet could I be silent and cheerfully die,
If I were only sure God cared;
If I had faith and were only certain
That light is behind that terrible curtain.

"But what if He listeth nothing at all
Of words a poor wretch in his terror may say?
That mighty God who created all
To labour and live their appointed day;
Who stoops not either to bless or ban
Weaving the woof of an endless plan."

The struggle is intense—visions of home—whisperings of friendships—murmurings of love—all slumbering memories wake, pleading that the easy formula may be said, and life be spared. But he will not say the word. He will die—not for faith's sake, but for the honour of the English name, which must not be disgraced. And then comes the sad moral of the resolution :—

"Ay, but the word, if I could have said it,
I by no terrors of hell perplext,
Hard to be silent and have no credit
From man in this world or reward in the next;
None to bear witness and reckon the cost
Of the name that is saved by the life that is lost.

"I must be gone to the crowd untold
Of men by the cause which they served unknown,
Who moulder in myriad graves of old;
Never a story and never a stone
Tells of the martyrs who die like me,
Just for the pride of the old countree."

* "Verses Written in India." By Sir Alfred Lyall. (Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co.)

INDIA: A DESCRIPTIVE POEM.*

This book is dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. the Earl of Lytton; but we are not told whether the author of "Fables in Song" was charmed or not with the stanzas which Mr. Garrick has given to the world. For ourselves, we would prefer Mr. Garrick as an archæologist to Mr. Garrick as a poet. However, we are humble as critics of verse—knowing that tastes differ as to what men or gods call poetry. And we will allow our readers to judge for themselves after the perusal of a couple of specimens which we cull at random from the volume before us. Here is one stanza descriptive of India, containing, however, a truth which orators in Parliament on Indian grievances might notice—viz., that India is not "one," but "many" :—

"Whose each town holds ten nationalities
No nation India—Nation's not the word,
Since foreigners from all localities,
Cis and trans-ocean, in each city herd,
Such clept a Nation eke enseems absurd,
With language, argot, dialect galore,
And petty Principalities that gird
(In semi-independent States sprent o'er)
Himalaya's icy North, and, South, the briny shore."

If this be not melody the reader may find fitful harmony in the following :—

"When they descended to the low-lying rank,
And fumy loathsome moisture of Bengal,
Malarious exhalations rotten, dank,
With foul miasma clammy, weaken'd all
Who did in its disgusting vapour fall.
Here they luxurious and effeminate grew,
And their wants multiplied—they learnt to loll
On pillow'd carpets, and supine to view
Submerged plains where the rice fields loamy ooze did spew.'

But, after this, the reader will, perhaps, think that we have given him enough of Mr. Garrick as a poet.

THE LAND OF THE DRAGON.†

This is a delightful book, full of matter grave and gay, concerning travel, sport, adventure, and Chinese character and politics. Mr. Percival extenuates little regarding the Celestial character, but tells the truth plainly. He is amusing and instructive, and has made good use of the time in which he has gathered together his experiences of the Flowery Land. He is very candid in his opinions, as may be guessed from the following :—

"I have heard newcomers to Shanghai say, 'Don't you find the Chinese a most interesting people? I think they are so simple, so ingenuous.'

"Well, after living among them for sixteen years, I have found them to be anything but interesting; and as for ingenuousness, I do not believe such a virtue is to be found throughout the entire nation. Deceit and cunning are sown broadcast over the land, and upon principle that never by any chance speak the truth."

* "India: A Descriptive Poem." By H. B. W. Garrick, Assistant Archæologist to the Government of India. (Trübner and Co.)

It is possible that a Heathen Chinee would say that this opinion has been "set down in malice;" but Mr. Percival gives very good reasons for the faith that is in him concerning his Native friends—of whose amendment, however, he does not despair. And then he says this in their favour, "They cheat and deceive one another quite as much as they endeavour to dupe the foreigner."

OLD CHELSEA.*

This book has been a long time on our library table—but not unopened. It has been read and re-read with delight, and laid down with regret. It is a book which will fascinate all readers, from the first page of perusal to the last. Fifty years ago Chelsea was a rustic and retired village far from London; the railway and the omnibus have done much to shake belief in the fact, but fact it is, yet it is pleasant to find that the memories of Old Chelsea have not altogether passed away into oblivion. Mr. Martin tells how this "secluded suburb" was such a favourite resort in certain good (or wicked?) old times:—

"It was high and healthy, and had easy access to town by the safe, swift, silent highway of the river, when few cared to go by the land road, bad enough at its best, unsafe even in daylight by reason of the foot-pads; but at last made wide and smooth for his coach by Charles II., recently restored. He used it as the royal route to Hampton Palace, and called it the King's Private Road. Even that exclusive name did not serve to make it safe; and long after Chelsea Hospital was built, a guard of its pensioners nightly patrolled, as an escort for honest travellers, from where Buckingham Palace now stands, across Bloody Bridge—at the edge of present Pimlico -and so away through the Five Fields, 'where robbers lie in wait,' as the Tatler puts it. For Mr. Dick Steele often went by this road to Chelsea, to his little house near the river bank; whereto he was fond of taking 'a friend to supper,' sending word home to his 'dear Prue' that he should not be able to return till the next morning, the roads being so unsafe by night! Sometimes his friend Addison was with him; sometimes the latter walked this way alone to his own home, at the farther end of Chelsea; and once, on a moonlight night, he strolled out here with Colonel Esmond, as you may remember. A few years later, this same walk was frequently taken by Mr. Jonathan Swift, from Mrs. Vanhomrigh's house in Suffolk-street, Pall-mall—where he used to leave his 'best gown and periwig,' as he tells Stella—'and so to Chelsea a little beyond the Church.' And still later, in December, 1754, Smollett was robbed of his watch and purse—there was but little in the latter, for he was then in poor case—as he went by coach from London to his residence out in Chelsea."

The revival of The Pink Dominoes has recalled some of the forgotten memories of Cremorne; but how many theatre-goers or critics know that the once notorious gardens could claim some sort of association with the name of William Penn? Mr. Martin tells us how:—

"The very name of this haunt of feasting and flirting, by a peculiar irony, was derived from the Viscount Cremorne, its former owner, 'this most excellent man,' known, even when plain Thomas Dawson before his peerage, as a model of all that was steady and sedate. His second wife, the great-granddaughter of William Penn, was named Philadelphia, from the city of her birth—a good woman whose character, her funeral sermon assures us, 'it was difficult to delineate.' She becoming Lady Cremorne, and outliving her husband, inherited this charming villa and grounds, called Chelsea Farm; and left it at her death, in 1825, to her nephew, Granville Penn, 'one of the Hereditary Governors and Proprietaries of the late Province of Pennsylvania.' He sold it, and it became a den of drinking, dancing, devilry. The ancient gilded barge, The Folly, moored on its river-front, was once more the scene of just such orgies as it had known in its youth, during the roystering days of the Revolution."

It will be seen from these extracts what a chatty companion and pleasant guide Mr. Martin is. His book is a delight, which is further enhanced by the charming pictures of Mr. Pennell, which profusely illustrate the letterpress.

ENGLISH IDYLLS.†

This is a book of what the author calls "little pictures" of quaint Norfolk and Suffolk country life, but one showing very irregular workmanship. Some of the sketches are weak and washy in the extreme; but others are excellent, and the local colour is admirable. And it is only fair to say that the latter sketches make the majority. Of these some are delightfully quaint and charming. Mr. Emerson's little volume will be much appreciated by many readers, especially by those who know something of the East country from which he takes the subjects of his pictures.

THE YOUNG SOLDIER IN INDIA.†

This little work, which first came out in a series of papers contributed to a well-known military magazine, is a work calculated not only to interest soldiers, but to do good in throwing a true and honest light upon barrack-room life in the ranks. A question has lately been asked whether a soldier's life is worth living, and although the Adjutant-General of the Army has naturally answered the question in the affirmative, there are still sceptics who would reply in the negative. This book should be read by all respectable young fellows who may be in doubt whether to enlist, and take to soldiering as a career, or to seek their fortunes in some other direction. There was a time, certainly, when enlistment in the British Army was not accepted as a proof of respectability. The recruit, who gave himself as "food for powder," was too often a ne'er-do-well at home, fitted for no honest trade, and who was only too anxious to escape from the associations of his youth and home. He generally belonged to a class which was peculiarly susceptible to those blandishments of theRecruiting Sergeant, especially when the blandishments were served up to him with a liberal quantity of beer. He was then "easily persuaded," and, taking "the shilling," under bibulous influences, he was marched away to depôt or regiment to learn, too late for repentance, that a soldier's life in those days was not all that the fancy of Sergeant Kite had painted to him. Better times, however, have come for the British army, and the private soldier is now no longer the pariah of society. A marshal's baton may not be in many knapsacks, but a steady, honourable young fellow has a better chance now of gaining a good position in the army than in many more promising trades. But much as the position of the soldier has been improved at home, it is to India that the young recruit should look for the best chances in a military career. Here is a description of a British private soldier's position to-day in that country as told by H. S.:—

"The soldier in India is surrounded with everything that can make him happy. Carking care in the search for his daily bread he knows not. His life is one continued change of excitement; his surroundings are pretty as they only can be in India. The State educates his children free while in the regiment, although this is a charge that falls excessively heavy on the departmental man. He is free as no other man is anywhere—so free that the necessary mild discipline is hardly felt. He is a better, higher, more moral, and a far more intelligent man than he would be at home, inasmuch as his experience tend to expand his ideas, and take them out of the narrow groove acquired in his early village life, or in the little Bethel he was made to attend in his youth. . . . . The climate is hard to bear, and diseases and pitfalls abound on every side; but there are ways and means of warding off and mollifying these, and, should the soldier succeed in serving out his time, and have conducted himself well, he will at last obtain a competence. Thus freed from care from the beginning of his career to the end of his life, what more can anyone desire? Can anyone require more than an easy, happy, peaceful old age?"

This description we know to be faithfully accurate, and the War Office ought to thank the writer for such a valuable help to recruiting. The book deserves a wide circulation.

HINDU-KOH.†

General Macintyre is a gallant soldier and a gallant sportsman. Although he wears the Cross for Valour on his breast, and has performed the most daring feats with his rifle in the higher Himalayas, he bears all his weight of triumphs "lightly as a flower." He is modest, as all brave men should be; but his achievements on battle-field and hunting-ground have not been small. He has won rank and the Victoria Cross by the former, and he has gained a lasting reputation as "a sportsman of sportsmen" by what he has done and dared on hardly less dangerous grounds. "Peace hath her victories no less renown'd than war"; and those of General Macintyre's, modestly recorded in his entertaining book, go to swell her triumphs. Readers who have the taste for sport, which all Englishmen are supposed to possess, will be charmed with this book. It tells of adventurous risks encountered for pure love of sport in pursuit of game which could only be got at altitudes of from 12,000 to 16,000 feet above sea level, close to where the eternal snow puts a boundary line on the mighty Himalayas, across which human footstep never trod and returned to tell the tale. Mont Blanc is no longer the "monarch of mountains" now; his crown rests on higher brows in Indian altitudes, but defies mortal hand to touch it. General Macintyre has dared as much as it was possible for soldier, mountaineer, and sportsman to do, and the record of his daring is instructive, amusing, and fascinating, and charming also, because so modestly told. His book, which contains also numerous illustrations, will be appreciated by the large circle of readers which the name and fame of its author are certain to command for it.

"AD ORIENTEM."*

Although Mr. Frederickson is not of that class of travellers who would go from Dan to Beersheba and cry "all is barren," he has not much that is new to tell us in giving us the story of his wanderings through India, China, and Japan. He appears to have contented himself by following the old beaten track of previous travellers—his immediate object possibly being merely to please himself—the idea of writing a book being an after-thought. Nevertheless, he has put together a very pleasant record of sight-seeing, genially and modestly written. There are duller guides, who are authors of books of travel, than Mr. Frederickson, who interests, amuses, and does not bore. And this is no little praise. The book is well illustrated with many coloured plates from drawings by the author himself, which display considerable artistic ability. Botanical students will be specially interested in the descriptions and sketches of Eastern flowers and fruits.

PIG-STICKING AND HOG-HUNTING.*

This book, which is dedicated, by permission, to the Duke of Connaught, "the first Prince of Royal blood who has taken a 'first spear,'" is one which must find a place of honour in every sportsman's library. Such libraries are not generally extensive ones, but without Captain Baden-Powell's book they will be "poor indeed." The author, a thorough sportsman himself, rightly says that pig-sticking, a sport second to none, and invaluable to our prestige and supremacy in India, deserves, what it has not had for years, a book to itself. Captain Baden-Powell has supplied that want in a most complete and workmanlike manner. His book gives not only good anecdotes of daring and dashing rides, but it teems with information of the most interesting and valuable kind. Pig-sticking he recommends as an admirable school for civilians and soldiers, and which should meet with every encouragement from the Government. Captain Baden-Powell acknowledges with thanks the help he has had from many true sportsmen, "Bill Beresford" and others, in compiling the valuable and varied information which he gives his readers. The work is well illustrated with some twenty-five admirable pictures from the author's own skilful hand.
